Keeping Promises Important to Child

By Mrs. Agnes Lyne

Every business man knows that when he gives his word he must keep it or forfeit the respect and good will of his associates, good will of his associates, good will of his associates.

Parents to promises made to their children, think nothing of breaking promises made to their children.

Yet the word given to a child should be considered as binding as that given to a friend or associate. If father has said, "We are going to the park today and we'll see the lion in the zoo," then he really must show him that lion. If mother has said, "Tomorrow at the picnic we'll fry bacon on sticks," then no matter what else there may be to eat, there must certainly be bacon fried on sticks. When a child, having been told that he can spend the money he has saved for anything he likes, chooses to buy a bowl of goldfish, he must be allowed to bring it home and keep it, even though it may be a good deal in the way.

A moment's reflection will at once make clear why such seeming-by-trivial promises must be kept. If they are not the child is made needlessly unhappy. Each time his parents fail him his faith in their fairness is further undermined. Finally he will grow up to be a person who fails to keep his word in really big matters, just as his parents failed to keep theirs in the little ones that were so big to him.

If parents do keep faith with the child he is spared many of the needless frustrations of childhood; his respect for his parents is strengthened, and following, as all children do the good example of those they love, he will become a man whose word is his bond and who earns the respect of his fellows.

Calfskin Industry Is Growing; Economic Factors Are Favorable

By W. R. Fisher
(President, National Leather Company)

BOSTON, Aug. 24. (AP)—The calfskin industry in this country is experiencing an economic growth. Last year the United States tanned the skins of 15,384,000 calves to meet the greatest demand since 1924. The early months of this year are tending to increase their herds. It is not expected that in 1929 the output, but the upward turn was made in May. Deliveries, which started to climb two months ago, have risen above the monthly average of the past three years and production is following. Fall requirements appear promising.

The industry faces many vexatious problems of supply and foreign competition, but it is growing nevertheless. The growth has developed largely because American farmers make an excellent product and they have learned how to diversify it.

Calf leather has always been a favorite for men's shoes, but it did not formerly find the same degree of favor for women's shoes. The technique of the industry, however, has gone far to overcome the discrimination. A large proportion of calves, being killed young, yield skins of light weight and beautiful texture. Such skins are now treated, by improving methods, to produce light, strong, "glowy" leather adapted for the most exacting fashions and patterns of women's shoes.

American tanners are traditional world leaders in producing calfskins with a suede finish. Calfskin suedes have justly had preference over other suede leathers in all periods of strong fashion demand, which have recurred at intervals for 30 years. The present is witnessing an insistent demand again for calfskin suedes.

Although the bulk of calf leather is made into men's, women's and children's shoes, a great many women's handbags and pocketbooks, belts and other articles of adornment and utility are made of this versatile leather.

During the recent steady growth of the industry various economic influences have been at work.

HEALTH

MEAL TIME FOR THE TODDLER

By LeRoy A. Wilkes, M. D., Director, Division of Medical Service, American Child Health Association.

The diet for the toddler (two to six years) should provide those things which are essential for nutrition, growth, and development during this important period.

These are four main groups of foods necessary to maintain a balanced diet:

1. The body-builders (proteins) such as meats, baked beans.
2. The energy-givers (carbohydrates) such as potatoes.
3. The heat-producers (fats) such as butter, olive oil, cream.
4. The body-regulators, which supply the minerals and those mysterious growth-controlling, the vitamins, as well as the uncollected waste material which daily aids in completing the bowels.

Each of these groups of foods has certain functions to perform in the process of growth and development. A balanced meal has some representative of each of these groups of foodstuffs.

Other things beside food are necessary. The advantage of coming to the dinner table in a pleasant frame of mind is well known and the unfavorable effect of fatigue from excessive play is also known to many parents. Disciplinary measures are not to be administered at the table. One may send the child away from the table if necessary but the conversational subjects at table should be pleasant, and even the toddler's right to indulge in his tantrums should be recognized. Positive attention should be given to the speaker. Thus emotional balance and control are assured. If the child is tired, allow him to lie down and rest before eating, else he cannot properly digest his food nor get the greatest benefit from it. The best food carefully selected and prepared, hastily served and eaten is of no benefit unless the body processes function properly. To digest and Continuing our consideration of the strength needed to justify an informative double made at the first opportunity the doubler has to declare, and supplementing my statement of last Monday, that when an informative double is made by a Second Hand of a Dealer and the doubler sitting over the bidder (the most favorable position for a doubler), should have at least five high cards apt to take tricks; I now add that in either of the other positions in which an informative double may be made, the doubler should have at least six high cards apt to take tricks.

The two less favorable positions for an informative double are: (1) Third Hand, after a pass by the partner (Dealer) and a bid by Second Hand; and (2) Fourth Hand, after a bid by Dealer, followed by two passes. An informative double in the Third Hand position is less advantageous than when made second hand because the partner of the doubler has passed and therefore it is not as probable that he will have cooperative strength and to produce satisfactory results, as in the case in which he has not had an opportunity to declare. When West doubles South's (Dealer's) bid, East will average better support for the double than South will when, after South's initial pass, North doubles East's bid.

The Fourth Hand position is especially disadvantageous for a double because in that case the doubler is sitting on the bidder's right (generally called under the bidder); in the other two cases the double is on the bidder's left, over the bidder). Kings, which probably would be winners when held on the left of a No Trumper, are apt to be losers when held on the right of the No Trumper.

The following hands illustrate conservative requirements for doubling No Trump information, just under doubling strength:

NORTH POWDER PERSONALS

Mr. and Mrs. Gray of Payette, Idaho have been visiting here with Mrs. Gray's sister, Floss Pearson. Mrs. Pearson will accompany them back to spend a few days visiting them at Payette.

Harry Atterberry returned last week from different points in Washington where Mr. Atterberry has been helping with the harvest.

Mrs. Al Randa is spending her vacation in Portland visiting her parents there.

Ralph Hutchinson and Carl Forstrom returned this week from Seattle, Washington.

Ethel and Audrey Forstrom assemble in to replace the worn out coils and add new ones for growth and development. The body can only do this work effectively when it is in fit condition from head to toes. The process of digestion is not dependent on the stomach and intestines alone—all the rest of the body, including the brain, plays a very important part.

The essentials then for proper nutrition, growth and development are:

1. Food.
2. Fun.
3. Fitness.
4. Fellowship.

And the toddler should be assured his rightful share and be shown due consideration.
