Bridge Pointers

Continuing the series of hands in which the slight difference between the cards held makes a great difference in the method in which Declarer should use in the development of his combined hands, we give today Nos. 11 and 12. In both South is the declarer; Hearts are trump and West's lead is in the King of Spades.

The Difference in Management of The Two Hands

The difference between Nos. 11 and 12 is that in the former, Closed Hand is one more heart and has not a small club. In both cases Closed Hand should win the first trick with the Ace of Spades and would note the advantage of discarding losing cards on Dummy's trumps. Declarer also will wish to cut Spade with a trump in Dummy's hand at least only four discards can be obtained and Closed Hand has five losing cards. The thoughtless player would ruff immediately, but in No. 11 that would be very foolish because if one adverse hand has three trumps, the trumps could not be exhausted and Dummy's Clubs established. Consequently in No. 11, the Ace and King of trumps should be led from Closed Hand and if all four adverse trumps drop, a Grand Slam seems easy. Declarer would lead in Clubs, Dummy's four remaining Clubs. Of course the last Club in Dummy might not be good, but if probably would be. If the adverse trumps be divided 3-1, Declarer must lead the Ace of Clubs to trick 4 and a trump to trick 5, drawing the last in Dummy in order to ensure the running of Dummy's Clubs.

In No. 12, Declarer, holding a small Club to cut Dummy's in and these being no danger of blocking that suit, should lead a Spade to trick 2, giving Dummy an immediate ruff, he then could lead the Jack and another trump from Dummy, expecting to exhaust the adverse trumps and get three discards on Dummy's Clubs. This would be playing for a practically sure Small Slam. By leading a Club to trick 3, playing Ace from Closed Hand, giving Dummy a second Spade ruff and then leading a trump, a Grand Slam could be made if the adverse trumps were divided 2-2; but with a 4-1 division game might be lost.
