BITES

By Robert T. Morris, M. D., New York City, Member Gorgas Memorial

Bites take secure hold upon the imagination of the public because they belong to the unusual and unexpected. Bites from insects for the most part are merely annoying. If we except those of the Tsetse fly and the malarial mosquito, for example, which carry organisms into the blood and produce constitutional derangements. As a matter of fact these are not bites—they are punctures; but in commonplace language they fit into a small boy's idiom and small boys who grow up continue this handy classification of injuries from insects.

In higher animal life bites may have very serious consequences because microbes are carried deeply into wounds made by teeth and these microbes are out of reach of first aid remedies which are now becoming so popular. Because of the carrying of microbes deeply into wounds by teeth, the cases belong to the doctor and very promptly at that. Treatment with home remedies may be disastrous because microbes grow very fast down out of reach. Men do not bite each other very often, but when they do, the sort of men who are likely to bite are just the ones who carry many microbes upon their teeth. This kind of bite is highly poisonous for another particular reason—the tissues are bruised in addition to the puncture. Bruised tissues lose their natural resistance to the growth of microbes.

Dog bites furnish a particularly dangerous group of injuries for the reason that all members of the dog family, from the wolf down, have the habit of giving a shake along with the bite. The shake causes deep bruising. On that account dog bites require very prompt surgical treatment quite aside from any question of hydrophobia. Pet squirrels add a bruise to their bite which is quite different from the cleaner punctures made by the teeth of a cat when its tail is looked upon as a handle by the children. The rat bite is a bruise bite and may be especially poisonous because rats eat decomposing material loaded with microbes.

Horse bites are bruise bites, or to use a technical expression, the wound is "lacerated and contused." Snake bites, which were formerly so greatly dreaded, are clean punctures so far as microbes are concerned, but they carry venom deep into a wound because each fang is hollow like a little tube, and venom is thrown out from the ends of the fangs. Medical progress has reduced the fear of snake bites because two remedies have become popular. A little package containing of permanganate of potash with a solution bottle and a syringe is now carried by many people in snake regions. The needle of the syringe carried down into a puncture made by a fang injects permanganate solution which neutralizes the poison. Furthermore, we now have antivenin which is kept in stock by drug houses and which may successfully overcome the effect of snake poison even when first aid has not been applied.

Bites of some members of the spider family and of some of the larger ants contain a formic acid element that is quickly neutralized by solutions of ordinary household ammonia. These bites are seldom very deep and the ammonia seems to reach to the bottom.

AT THE THEATERS

Colleen Moore In "Oh Kay" At the Star

A thermometer in quest of new altitude records last summer did not at all disturb Colleen Moore, star of First National's new comedy, "Oh Kay!", coming to the Star Theatre Sunday for three days.

For thanks to the scenarist of "Oh Kay!", Colleen spent her days on the set quite comfortably in that perfect hot-weather costume, a bathing suit. It almost looked as though Colleen had an arrangement with the Weather Man to time the warm spell while she was thus garbed, for by the time she was more elaborately dressed for other episodes of "Oh Kay!" she was enjoying the cool breezes of the Pacific aboard a large sailing vessel off the Southern California coast.

An unusual variety of costumes are worn by Miss Moore in "Oh Kay!". Her wardrobe for the picture includes pajamas, all-skins, the black-and-white uniform of a house-maid, a motoring costume and an attractive tea gown. The Weather Man kept smiling for Colleen throughout the filming of the picture and the weather always suited her costume.

"Oh Kay!", scenarized by Carey Wilson from the popular musical comedy, was produced by John McCormick for First National Studios, with a supporting cast made up of Lawrence Gray, Allan Hale, Ford Sterling, Claude Gillingwater, Julanne Johnston, Edgar Norton and others. Mervyn LeRoy, who directed "Harold Teen," wielded the megaphone on "Oh Kay!" He had previously been a "comedy constructor"—or gag man — on Colleen Moore productions.

Farce Comedy Due Sunday At Colonial

"One of the stock laughing figures in song and story, on the stage and on the screen, in books and in real life, is the father of marriageable daughters who tries to control his daughter when she is in love. Seldom is such a father a tragic figure," says Charles K. French, who acts the role of the father of the beautiful and extremely blond Edna Murphy in Sterling's farce comedy, "Oh, What a Night!" which will be on view Sunday, at the Colonial Theatre.

"Just why the figure of an irate father, disapproving of his daughter's choice of a husband, should be regarded as a comic character, I cannot explain. Its origin is probably shrouded in the mists of antiquity. Perhaps the aboriginal suitor clubbed the father as well as the bride into submission; tickling the funny-bone of the spectators. The idea has been used so often in story-telling that it has become a pattern from which there is slight alteration even today. The humor in the situation of the father forbidding his daughter's marriage has been transferred through long-continued usage, to the general situation of a father trying to exact obedience from a rebellious daughter. The sympathy is 999 times out of a thousand with the daughter, while only laughter greets the father.

"In 'Oh, What a Night!' I play the role of a father who rebels at his daughter's extravagance in charging clothes and jewels up to him. The straw that causes his outbreak is the purchase of a $10,000 string of pearls—if even a billionaire would call that sum a straw. The father looks the pearls up in his safe and later tries to pawn them to make a promising investment which will not wait. The pearls disappear, through the father's fault, and he is in hot water for the rest of the picture. He must play the part seriously, yet at the same time get across much of the comedy in the film."

"Deception, as a rule, may legally be excused, but when a person is a fake and he is found out—Good night!"

In these words Franklin Pangborn, who enacts the title role of the fake prince of India in "My Friend From India," a new Pathe-De Mille comedy coming to the Arcade theatre on Sunday, states his position in this screen comedy directed by E. Mason Hopper.

"Ordinary deception," says Pangborn, "may have many ulterior motives, and at the bottom there may be adequate reasons therefor. But when a man masquerades as a real Prince from India, as I do in this picture, he is taking his life in his hands. And I don't mean maybe!"

"You see," continued the comedian, "they find out that I'm not a real dark-skinner prince after all. Then the fireworks start!"

Franklin Pangborn is featured with Elinor Fair in "My Friend from India." Ben Hendricks, Jr., Ethel Wales, Lewis Natheaux, Jeannette Loff, Tom Ricketts, Tom Dugan, and Edgar Horton completes the cast.

Always Use The Telephone Directory

Many times every day, telephone patrons call the wrong number. This is bad for everybody. If you've been called out of bed at 4 o'clock in the morning by "wrong number" you've been madder than a hornet and you blamed "Central" for it. And the one who tried to call the party got mad, too, because there was a delay.

HERE'S A SAFE RULE FOR EVERYBODY: Consult the telephone book. Don't rely on your memory.
