1928 Baseball Season One Of Hardest Fought

By Jay R. Vossler. (Sports Service Sports Editor) NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—Many a fan will have come and gone before the season ended, three days before the 1928 edition of the national pastime.

There were fierce battles for the pennants in almost every league in the major leagues where the championships were in the balance right up to the final week. At least two minor leagues finished in a tie and the contest for the National League flag was as close one week from the finish that arrangements were made for a playoff in case of a tie.
