AT THE THEATERS

Rex Bell Scores As Girl-Shy Cowboy

The third of Fox's series of Rex Bell westerns, "The Girl-Shy Cowboy," which opens at the National Theatre today, brings with it the tang of the open spaces and a little romance that advances this production far beyond the usual run of westerns.

The story is a logical account of life in the sagebrush country without inflicting the whop-whop beat of the range who for so long has monopolized western productions.

The supporting cast is exceptionally good. Patrice O'Leary is once again the star. The others are George Morley, who appeared in "Four Sons," Donald Stuart, Margaret Coulson, Betty Caldwell and Joan Lyons. R. Lee Hough directed the production.

New Picture Tells Story On French Warship

A trip aboard a French battleship with a number of exciting doings thereon, is offered on the screen of the Arcade theatre today in "The Night Watch," the first National picture starring Billie Dove, which is the present attraction there. Almost the entire action of the dramatic story takes place in the stateroom, gun turret and on the decks of a modern battleship, and almost an entire half-hour is built into the studio for close-up scenes of the production.

Donald Reed and Paul Lukas play opposite the star, both appearing as officers of the French navy. Alexander Korda directed the picture, which was adapted from "The Night Watch," a stage success of a few years ago.

Tim McCoy In "The Adventurer" At the Star

Tim McCoy, dashing adventurer of the screen, has a new setting and a new brand of adventures for his latest Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer vehicle, now playing at the Star theatre.

It is a romance of the tropics, with McCoy playing an American mining engineer thrust, through a strange tick of fate, into the midst of a Latin-American revolution—and, through a series of strenuous adventures, into the position of arbiter of the fate of the little country in which the strange adventure took place.

It is a story crisscrossed with thrills, hairbreadth escapes, daring feats of horsemanship, and with a pretty romance told to an accompaniment of the thunder of guns and the staccato rap of machine guns.

McCoy plays a mining engineer whose friend is deposed as president in a revolution. He loves his friend's daughter—which leads him to take a hand in affairs—and then the fun begins to fly. His personal escape from a firing squad, his strange and thrilling capture of a rebel general, and several other astounding and exciting details mark the swiftly moving story.

Bartholomew Sebastian's dark beauty is charmingly displayed as the hero of the new play, a vivid arena of the tropics.
