

Two, Injured At Ponds, Taken To Baker City

By Mrs. M. P. Haymond (Observer Correspondent)
PONDOSA, Ore., (Special)—
Glen D. Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. K. W. Smith of this place, was seriously injured Tuesday night about 8 p. m. at the box factory. He was removing a belt from a large pulley with a stick. No one witnessed the accident, but it is thought that the stick caught in the wheel and threw Mr. Smith across the room with such a force as to cause a compound fracture of the right leg, broken left wrist and smashed his arm between the shoulder and elbow. He was taken to the hospital at Baker.

At nine o'clock the same evening T. L. Gracia, employed at the mill had his right hand so badly crushed that the middle finger and part of the little one had to be amputated. He was taken to St. Elizabeth's hospital.

Miss Lucy A. Case, nutrition specialist of Oregon State college extension service gave a demonstration of salad making Friday. An Interested group of women attended. Thirty varieties of salad were made and later served at luncheon. After lunch Miss Case gave a lecture on food for mother and infant. This was the second of Miss Case's lectures here. The next will take place Dec. 11, when the school lunch will be discussed.

Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Wankler and Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Vanover returned Wednesday morning from Oswego where they had spent a week visiting relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Anderson left Saturday for Union where they will make their home. Mr. Anderson has been employed in a logging camp here.

Mrs. H. W. Redden fell from the top of a flight of eight steps Thursday and injured her ankle. She kept using it until Wednesday when it became worse and she went to St. Elizabeth's hospital for treatment. Mrs. Redden's home is at the Grande Ronde logging camp.

Thomas Powers, brother of P. J. Powers, of Medical Springs and his wife, arrived from Boston, Mass., on Thursday. They started to drive through but encountered such storms and heavy snows that they left their car in Denver and finished the trip by rail. Mr. and Mrs. Powers visited here a year ago last summer and have returned to spend the winter.

The spirit of hallowe'en reigned

Cove Hallowe'en A Night of Much Mischief Making

By Mrs. A. G. Conklin (Observer Correspondent)
COVE, Ore., (Special)—The night of Oct. 31 found all the witches and spirits abroad, busily plying their trade of mischief making and the morning light showed that all property that was at all portable had been moved to a new location. The streets of the city were littered with a motley assortment of wagons, ladders, rules, etc., scattered here and there, all the wheels removed and thrown promiscuously about, lumber barricaded the highway and other things of a portable nature were scattered about.

Mrs. Amanda Silla is recovering from an accident she met with about ten days ago. She was alighting from a car, when the driver started to go, throwing her to the pavement, and injuring her back quite severely. She spent a week in bed but is now able to walk about some.

Mrs. Grant Yoder and daughter, Ethel, of Hanna, Alberta, arrived supreme Wednesday. A party was held in each of the school rooms in the afternoon. In the primary room each pupil invited a younger brother or sister and in the upper grade room the mothers were invited. Refreshments were served in both rooms.

The Women's club gave a "spook" party for their members and husbands in the evening. Ghosts and goblins danced with witches and clowns. Apple cider and doughnuts were served from a booth and before the close of the evening, baked beans and brown bread sandwiches, pumpkin pie and coffee was served. The room was decorated in hallowe'en colors and jack o' lanterns. About 25 couples attended.

Toy dealers say arrival of the "Great Zeppelin" has created unusual demand for mechanical flying toys, especially for miniature "Zepps" which, suspended by string, fly in a circle.

A Canadian department store has taken the tip from America's big mail order houses and established "sample depots," where shoppers may make selections in an effort to increase mail order sales.

Portland's Trade Center Shifted To Sixth Street From Stark Street

By E. P. Nelson (Associated Press Staff Writer)
PORTLAND, Ore., (AP)—Growth of Portland in the last few years has seen the shifting of its financial center around the corner.

Five years ago Stark Street, which runs east and west through the heart of the city, gave such promise of being the money center that there was talk of changing its name to "Wall Street," but the "Old Timers" protested that the thoroughfare had been named in honor of a pioneer and that in any event it was better to have a name with individuality. Time and change solved the problem, for Sixth street, which intersects Stark, became its rival in a financial way and most of the city's large banks now front upon it and numerous investment houses occupy its buildings.

Portland has been described as a "city of camp, clipping," where bond salesman thrive. There has long been a market for good speculative stocks of all kinds, but industrial, municipal and foreign government bonds probably find the most buyers among the thrifty citizens. As a result large bond houses do a heavy business and buyers read the New York bond market quotations with as much interest as those of the stock and curb markets. There are under way, however, for establishment of a stock exchange.

While many are interested in speculation, chief financial activity in the city centers on such basic commodities as wheat and lumber, and business in these is of substantial character. The Merchants' Exchange, center of operations for dealers in wheat, who did a $47,000,000 business last year, is a cash market. Traders exhibit their commodities and sell only for real money.

Even on the Board of Trade, where men who operate in the primary wheat market do business, there is none of the excitement usually attending dealing in futures and millions of dollars change hands in a perfunctory routine way. Trading in lumber, which aggregated $13,000,000 last year, is carried on largely in office buildings.

Edison for Prohibition.
BOSTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—The Massachusetts republican committee today received the following telegram signed by Thomas A. Edison, Harvey S. Forestone and Julius Rosenberg:

"We believe that from the standpoint of national economics, national welfare and its effect on the American home, the policy of prohibition has been helpful and that the effect of its abandonment upon business, employment and family life would be injurious."

Before using any cleaner it is better to try it first on the inside of a man to see whether it will advance the condition and change the color.
