AT THE THEATERS

"Show People" Features Marion Davies

King Vidor used five different motion picture companies in one day's direction of "Show People," the new Marion Davies-William Haines co-starring picture, which comes to the Arcade theater today.
The sequence showed Miss Davies visiting one of the big stages at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio for a screen test. It was desired to show other directors working on adjoining sets.
As a result, the audiences, if they look carefully, will be given a quick look at William Haines and Anita Page working in a scene from "Telling the World;" Joan Crawford, John Mack Brown and Dorothy Sebastian in "Our Dancing Daughters;" and Louise Lorraine and Lawrence Gray playing with "Flash," the dog star, while making "Shadows of the Night."
All these companies were filmed incidentally, of course, as Miss Davies walks by them on her way to the set where she is to have a screen test.
The real cast of "Show People" includes: Polly Moran, Dell Henderson, Harry Gribbon, Tenen Holtz and Paul Ralli.

No Machine Guns In Picture At The Star

"Mr. Gangster," based on Charles Francis Coe's story, which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post and has been published in book form, was directed by Raoul Walsh, Fox Film ace, along progressive lines is now showing at the Star theater.
Believe it or not, there is not a machine gun in the entire pictured story, murder is not committed, there is no enmity between law breakers and police, yet there always is poignant, human drama, thrills, suspense, romance, battles of wits, battles of brawn with no scene that is not as natural as it is logical.
From all of which one can gather that "Mr. Gangster," as a story of the underworld is refreshingly different and it is.
Don Terry, juvenile, playing the lead in his first picture, is a real artist in Walsh's hands, and June Collyer is more beautiful than ever. Anders Randolf, Carol Lombard, Joe Brown, Albert De Bruller, Arthur Stone, Stella Adams and Barr McIntosh are part of the brilliant supporting cast.

Boomerang And Bullwhip Used In McCoy Film

Using boomerang and bullwhip, national weapons of Australia, in a series of thrilling adventures, Tim McCoy is starring in one of the most interesting of his Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions at the Colonial theater Friday. This is "The Bushranger," first all-Australian picture ever filmed in America and a vivid story of the Australian plains. McCoy plays a bushranger in a series of thrilling escapes and encounters, and the Australian weapons lend an touch of novelty to the thrills.
Chester Withey directed the production, with Marian Douglas as heroine and a notable cast that includes Russell Simpson, Richard R. Neill, Arthur Lubin, Rosemary Cooper, Dale Austen, Billy Franey, Frank Baker and many others of note.
The story is an original by Madeleine Ruthven. Among the thrills are McCoy's disarming an enemy with a revolver with the flying lash of his whip, the sensational escape from the troopers with a boomerang hurled into the lights, and other stirring and characteristic bits.
