Dr. Locke Gives Address In City Wednesday Night Dr. W. J. Locke, recently returned missionary from Hunan province, China, spoke last night at a special meeting held at the Presbyterian church, telling of his experiences while he was living in the oriental country. A fair-sized crowd attended. The meeting began at 7:30.
Political, social and economic conditions in China were discussed by Dr. Locke. He told of the Chinese uprisings. It was on one occasion of such disturbance that his home was destroyed. The uprisings, however, he said, are caused by a "red", radical element, which is not representative of the entire population.

use this summer. He donned a brilliant non-pastel shaded shirt, a windy sombrero and the other accoutrements which go with the old-time garb of the westerner.
He went forth to conquer the easterner and win him to the pleasures of the west. Everywhere he went he attracted attention and people talked to him and questioned him and he answered them singly and in groups and he extolled the beauties of the land from which he hailed so that the fame of the realm of the Wallowas, the land of "beautiful waters," spread from Alabama to Maine, and from North Carolina, to Iowa and back home again.
He invited them to come to visit him in the Wallowas the next year—in come in the summer, in the fall and in the winter and to partake of the privilege of skiing, tobogganing, sledding and skating in the Switzerland of America. Many promised to come.
He told them they could capture ringneck pheasant and Hungarian partridge every Sunday and Wednesday in October, that they could shoot ducks and geese from October until January, that they could stay in the deer and grouse from September to October, and the bear, coyote and lynx all the year. They could angle, he promised, for steelhead in February, March and April, and for eastern brook and rainbow trout from April to November.
All those things happen, he said, at the lake and at the Dude ranch.

Based on Traffic Checks Figures utilized in the survey are based upon traffic checks made by the state highway commission. They are not actual for the reason that such checks only are made on one day each month of the year between 6 a. m. and 10 p. m. Results so obtained per day, for the period covered by check, are reduced to a one-day average and this average treated as the multiplier for any longer period involved.
Considering the situation on the whole, especially in comparison with movement to and from California, the volume of travel over the Old Oregon Trail highway represents a fair proportion of the aggregate number of cars coming into Oregon via all routes. Mr. Malboeuf pointed out. It is manifest, however, he said, that a practical, aggressive campaign instituted for the purpose of widely advertising the Old Oregon Trail, especially through co-operative efforts between Oregon and Idaho counties bordering on the trail, should result in heavier movement that would yield greater momentum each year. Details for the formation of such an organization have already been under serious consideration by various chambers of commerce along the Oregon Trail, he said.
Discussions along this line had their inception last summer on the occasion of the goodwill visit of a large delegation from the Ontario chamber. Since that time a number of other chambers in Oregon and Idaho, including Boise, have agreed to operate together upon a concerted plan that, all interested believe, may result in a material increase of tourist travel, even this year, through Huntington as the key point in the Eastern Oregon situation. He said.
Registration Begins The 1929 registration of foreign licensed motor vehicles at the local chamber of commerce office started last Friday with an Idaho car as the vanguard of the season's movement over the Oregon Trail. This movement, Mr. Malboeuf believes, should reflect the heavier travel via this route since it was completed through to Beasdale. He sets forth various circumstances as justifying this viewpoint, including the general economic situation which is sound, the fact that prohibition of automobiles is expected to be of record character, and the
