AT THE THEATERS

Dangers of War Brought Forth In "Wings"

For those who have never experienced the so-called dangers of the air and who are postponing the final flight until flying is safer, "Wings," Paramount's great story of the American "Ace" in France, which is at the Arvada Theater, offers an opportunity to gather all the thrills of flying without the dangers.
The spectator is carried through the air, mixed in "dog fights" and "dash patrols" and given a taste of the aerial fighter's life which is breath-taking but entirely devoid of danger. "Wings" was dangerous in the making. Players, director, supervisor and cameramen alike spent hundreds of hours in the air in making "Wings." Director William Wellman, himself a member of the Lafayette squadron during the World War, insisted on realism.

HEALTH

DO I CAUSE MY CHILD TO BE NERVOUS?
By Louise G. Lawrence, M. D., New York City.
From early infancy some children are "nervous." They are fussy, irritable, hysterical, delicate, sensitive, easily upset, children. They become easily frightened, exhibit the utmost in placidity and politeness from their parents.
Most "nervous" children are, however, the product of the management given them. Their parents act in some or all the ways listed above. Nervous parents expect, and so cause, nervous children. They constantly remind the child of this. In their own nervousness they set an example, and it is usually imitated. They communicate their worries to the child, who increases them many fold. They cannot permit the child to lead a life of his own, and either "push him to the extreme limit, or do all the thinking for him.
Cultivate calmness. Do not fuss at the child. Give him power, an opportunity to do things and learn for himself. Use your common sense; recall your own childhood, be patient and kind. Settle your worries in some other way than by passing them on to the child. Know your child; his interests and capacities; his weaknesses and strong points. Above all, be yourself as calm and peaceful as you can. If you have any of the habits or attitudes listed above, change them.
Do I cause my child to be nervous? By being nervous myself? Telling him about it so I may have his sympathy? Constantly reminding
