FULL FLEETWOOD MAY RIDE AGAIN

Ways and Means Committee Approves Humane Society's Measure

SALEM, Ore., Feb. 26 (AP)— Full Fleetwood is a cowpuncher. He has never been to the legislature. It may be that he never has been inside the state house, to mingle with the political wise men and lobbyists who loiter along the rail in the capitol rotunda and take poor aim at the big brass cuspidors. His sphere is wider than that. This veteran ranger, on a strange mission and riding alone over the big distances of four or five Eastern Oregon counties, had no thought he was influencing legislation. But his services that Full Fleetwood performed caused the ways and means committee last night to approve an appropriation that otherwise would have gone into the discard.
Some years ago this ranger quit riding herd and branding calves and took on a job the like of which was probably never before undertaken by a cowboy. This was to enter the service of the state humane society. If some rancher was abusing his calves or driving his horses to the slaughterhouse, Full Fleetwood performed the task to advise the school boards to build sheds. If some worthless step-dad mistreated a child Fleetwood took him sharply to account. It seems he knows how to do these things diplomatically—sternly if necessary.

Last Bill Voted. Two years ago the governor, through no fault of his own, found it necessary to veto the humane society appropriation, so the society had to discontinue the work of Fleetwood and some other employees. Last night Mrs. F. H. Swanson, of Portland, head of the Oregon society, pleaded that the committee renew the $12,000 appropriation. Representative Henderson, of Portland, and one or two others spoke for it. But it was plain that the money wasn't going to be allowed, for the state has a deficit. Senator Jones moved that the bill providing the appropriation be not allowed.

HOME MARKET REPORT WILL BE FEATURE

gestions also concerning the planting and the cutting of alfalfa in order that best results might be secured and that its most important food value might not be destroyed.
Floyd Edwards, who has charge of the livestock at the Eastern Oregon Experiment station, gave a talk on feeding baby heaves, presenting charts which gave the figures secured during and after the experiments at the station. Mr. Edwards was frequently interrupted by pertinent questions which made this hour quite lively and profitable.

Yesterday Afternoon. Three very important topics were up for discussion yesterday. S. C. Jamison, of the extension service, handled the subject of contagious abortion in cattle in a way which made his hearers realize the seriousness of the situation at the present time and the great necessity for handling it properly. Mr. Jamison stated that 25 per cent of the cattle of Oregon was affected by this disease right now and mentioned important steps which might be taken to check its progress and eventually eradicate it. He stated that the use which will necessarily attend and follow this contagion is not so much in the loss of calves but in a lessened milk supply, in the sterility of the animals and in udder trouble. The group adopted a resolution calling for support of a bill now up before the legislature authorizing cow testers to act, and also providing for "abortion free areas." A message to that effect was sent to the Union county representative at Salem.

Cream Grading Talk. In the absence of J. D. Mickle, state dairy inspector, his assistant, Mr. Tully was present and talked on cream grading. As during the previous discussion the conference adopted a resolution, properly forwarded to Salem asking for the passage of a bill relating to the grading of cream in this state.
P. M. Brandt closed the afternoon program with an address on mineral feeds, suggesting those necessary for body maintenance and the production of milk. He condemned the practice of resorting to many of the so-called milk-producing feeds which are on the market.

STORMS KILL 29 IN SOUTH; DAMAGE HIGH

searched the wreckage in darkness, national guardsmen patrolled the vicinity to prevent looting and vandalism. The troops were ordered out early in the evening by Governor Theo. G. Bilbo.
Two black clouds rapidly converging in the northwest gave Duncan his first warning of the coming storm. There was a terrific roar as the clouds met and the air was filled with debris.

Scene of Confusion. "There was so much noise that it sounded as if every house in town was being torn to pieces," the Rev. E. E. McKethen, pastor of the Methodist church, said in describing the storm. "Nobody had time to do anything and it was all over in a matter of minutes. The tornado was followed by a scene of awful confusion with men and women screaming and running in all directions."

Duncan has no hospital and while the injured were being taken to first aid stations hastily set up in vacant store rooms a heavy rain added to their suffering. Twelve of those killed in Duncan met death instantly and the other two died within a few hours.
Two hours later a storm, probably the same one, struck Marks and jumped over into Arkansas and came down near Dewitt about 5 o'clock. C. I. Nicholson saw its approach while working in the rice fields and was running toward his family when the twister demolished his home, killing his wife and daughter.

Texas Damage $250,000. Texas was the first to experience the tornado. Mayor O. O. Wolf and a committee of citizens, after a survey of the wreckage of Duncan, estimated the damage at $250,000. Several thousand dollars loss was suffered by plantations near Marks while a number of barns and houses were damaged in the vicinity of Dewitt, Ark.

Of the approximately 40 persons injured in Mississippi, four were reported in a serious condition, and six were severely hurt in Texas. One man in Arkansas was taken to the hospital.

Several pranks of the storm stood out. At Duncan, Miss. an iron safe was picked up from an office and carried more than 100 yards and a flying stove building dropped on a negro, killing him but causing only slight damage to the structure. A man milking a cow in a barn at Cooper, Texas, saw his house torn from its foundation and his daughter, who was running to meet him, tossed through the door of the barn.

FLOODS IN OHIO. COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 26 (AP)—Heavy rains and rising temperatures that melted ice and snow sent streams and rivers on a rampage throughout most of Ohio today. Highest waters were reported in the southwestern part of the state, particularly at Springfield, where the business district and a section of the residential area were under water.

Several hundred homes along Luck creek were isolated and for a time water stood three feet deep in some of the business streets. Streams near Washington county house also were said to have exceeded the 1913 stage.
At Mount Vernon the river duplicated its stage of 1913 and put the Ohio Power Company's plant out of commission. Employees at the plant were marooned.
