Strange Disease Puzzles Medics; Livestock Dies

Developments within the last 24 hours have relieved a situation in this valley, which for a day or more threatened to prove a real tragedy and which, up to the present time, has completely baffled those who have been working on the case.

The circumstances in connection with the affair are these: Friday of last week a through freight carrying a load of animals from Crane intended for rendering plants etc at Portland, stopped here to dispose of the carcasses of three horses which had, supposedly, been trampled to death in the car.

The danger of bloat in livestock while grazing on sweet clover pasture is much less than that of other leguminous plants, doubtless due to the fact that the plant is unpalatable at first and it takes some little time for livestock to acquire a liking for it.

The matter of sweet clover causing hemorrhages in cattle is restricted entirely to the feeding of hay made from the second year sweet clover stand.

In regard to the tendency of cattle on sweet clover pasture to become sterile, the fact of the matter is that the reverse is more apt to be the case.

Similar expressions have come from those in adjoining states and from local growers. Some have reported occasional trouble with bloat and few have experienced bad effects from feeding coarse sweet clover hay.

A splendid article on the merits of sweet clover as a pasture crop for all classes of livestock appears in a recent issue of the "Oilpull Magazine" under the heading "Sweet Clover—The Wonder Crop" use the flesh for feeding purposes. They were removed to his farm and prepared for feed. Within a short time it was noticed that all the livestock which had come in actual contact with the carcasses in any way had evidently become infected.

Physicians, veterinarians, and any other officials who might have some solutions, or some authority to act were called. The matter has been placed in the hands of the state and federal officers who will probably be on the ground soon for purpose of making a thorough investigation.

The decided improvement in the condition of Mr. Kaesinger has relieved the situation tremendously. The loss to Mr. Hiatt, mentioned above, includes the death of two out of three horses, 24 hours after having become infected; 4 out of 6 geese, which died within 48 hours; several head of hogs, two valuable dogs, etc etc.

by only a wire fence were in any way affected. Whether or not Mr. Hiatt will have reimbursement for his loss is a matter of much interest locally, and the real cause of the death of the horses on the freight is a matter of much conjecture on all sides.

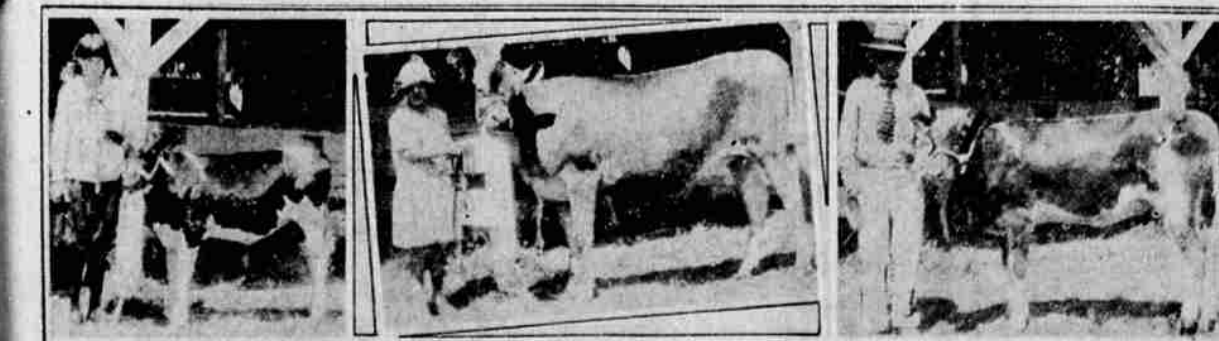

AUTO RUNS 59 MILES ON GALLON OF GAS
