Alabama Man Is Searching For Missing Brother

The search for his brother in fulfillment of a wish made to his dying father started Julius E. Taylor, of Leeds, Ala., on a trip by automobile across the continent. Yesterday Mr. Taylor was in La Grande making inquiries. Although so far he has found no leads in getting "warm" for the family in Alabama heard from the adventurer 21 years ago when he was located at Elgin, Ala. He later married at Elgin. Sometime later they heard from him at Nampa, Ida., and there the trail ends.

The brother for whom Mr. Taylor is searching is John B. Taylor, who is at least 40 years and a half inches tall, has blue eyes, fair complexion and at that time weighed 185 pounds and had black hair. He worked in a grocery store when in Alabama. "This is the hardest trail I've ever had to follow," says Mr. Taylor who for 12 years was chief of police in his town and for several years worked in the sheriff's office of Sinaloa and Jefferson counties in Alabama.

Mr. Taylor and his wife and their son, Houston, have been on the road since December and for the last two months have been in California. All along the way especially since they reached Oregon have been inquiring at various stations, county offices and chambers of commerce.

An interesting coincidence occurred yesterday when Mrs. Taylor had an attack of her sickness and a doctor was called when she reached La Grande. The physician happened to be Dr. W. P. McAdory, formerly of Alabama. He and Mr. Taylor knew each other when the doctor had a hospital in Alabama and Mr. Taylor as police chief and member of the sheriff's force used to bring patients there.

170 ESCAPE AFTER BLAST IN WORKINGS

wrecks of the fortunate came into the little mining village of Kinloch, where loved ones waited them in anxiety. Women and children, whose husbands, fathers and brothers yet were unaccounted for, questioned avidly those who came from the Valley Camp entry.

Grave doubts were expressed for those near the Kinloch entry. So fearful was the blast, miners long familiar with explosions said, there could be no possibility that those near the main heading had escaped.

After being held back by flames and smoke, rescue crews entered the Kinloch entry. Others were at the Valley Camp entry to go down into the pit from that section. Two crews, one from the Union Colliery company and another from the Island Coal company, went down the Kinloch opening. Rescue workers said there was grave danger from gas and after-damp.

Blast Terrible
Windows in the little mining village were shattered and the force of the explosion was felt over a wide area. The main tippie, constructed of sheet steel, steel beams and heavy timbers, was reduced to debris. The force of the blast split the mouth of the mine and drove like bits of wood, hurled a mine car from the slope and into the shattered tippie, and virtually tied knots in the rails over which the mine car ran.

One of the rescuers who went down in the Kinloch entry, reported one body was found in the main heading. The slope, he said, was fairly clear, and there was no fire.

Another rescuer returned from the Valley Camp entry and reported that on that side the mine was clear for 1,000 feet.

ESCAPE FROM MINE

PARNASSUS, Pa., Mar. 21 (AP)—Raymond Tomblin, one of the miners who escaped from the explosion that swept the Kinloch mine of the Valley Camp Coal company today, expressed the belief that many of his fellows had died within the pit. Tomblin said he found the body of his "buddy" as he was making his way to safety from the Valley Camp entry, five miles from the town of Kinloch.

Tomblin was one of a party of 21 men who came out of the Valley Camp entry. He said that with the explosion, there came a rush of air in that section of the mine, a haze filled the chambers soon after, and he detected gas, he said.

Confusion among the miners followed the blast. Some ran back into the mine, away from the Valley Camp opening. These Tomblin feared, did not escape. There were approximately 50 men working near Tomblin.

The miner said that as he wandered about he came upon the body of his "buddy" but saw no others. While he was getting out, Tomblin said, ice cold water rushed through the mine and rose almost to his chin.

OKLAHOMA HAS NEW EXECUTIVE

ulators attempted to meet on their own call to vote impeachment articles against him, he succeeded in dispersing them by court action.

Mrs. O. O. Hammond, Johnston's confidential secretary, drew much of the fire of the governor's political enemies. They charged she dominated the governor's office and dictated much of the state's official business.

The governor, declaring that attacks on her were inspired by "disappointed political spoilsmen" refused to discharge her. After he was suspended and shortly before his trial opened Johnston accepted Mrs. Hammond's resignation.

His Testimony
On the witness stand, he told the court he previously had declined to discharge his secretary because rumors, circulated by political enemies, had inferred his relations with her were improper. This charge included in the purported articles of impeachment voted by the attempted session in 1927, was not renewed, and, for this reason, Johnston said he felt justified in accepting the woman's resignation.

Johnston was removed as the deciding vote was cast against him. He sat, leaning at the ceiling, hands clasped in front of him, apparently not hearing the judgment of the court.

Mrs. Johnston, who had accompanied her husband to the court daily also appeared unmoved.

Immediately after the verdict, friends flocked around the deposed governor, extending their sympathy. Among them was Mrs. Hammonds.
