MENUS

Most housekeepers take much pride today in a well equipped kitchen and wise care as well as a selection of utensils is needed if order and efficiency are maintained.

While certain materials are especially adapted to certain needs in cooking, all articles made from the same material require the same general care, be they frying pans or muffin tins.

Aluminum is popular and practical and needs no special preparation to fit it for use in the kitchen. Many housewives object to the metal because so many foods to dissolve, but a careful choice of scouring powder makes it easy to remove stains. Keep in mind that alkali is the darkening agent for aluminum and care for it accordingly.

A neutral soap for washing, wood for scraping (half a cloth for cleaning and a wooden spoon for cooking) and very fine sandpaper or steel wool with thorough scalding and wiping will keep aluminum utensils in excellent condition.

Enamelware requires gentle handling since hard knocks make it chip. Neither will the average enamelware stand intense heat without checking, which leads eventually to chipping. It has the tendency to discolor and stains are easily removed with any scouring powder. Wood must be used for scraping or stirring in enamelware since metal scratches the glaze of the enamel and makes dark streaks. Hot soapuds, thorough scalding and drying keep this material at its best. If food sticks and burns let the pan cool before putting water in it. Then soak and scrape off burned particles with wood. If the burning was bad and some of the spots obstinate melt in small amount of fat slowly in the pan and scrape again.

The glass measuring cups, mixing bowls and miscellaneous dishes used in the kitchen will wear better if they are immersed in a panful of cold water and brought slowly to the boiling point and boiled for five or ten minutes. Let cool in the water. Wash in hot soapuds, scald and dry well if you would keep your glass clear and shining. If food sticks it will disappear with an application of steel wool.
