Shortly after it had removed from office its second governor in six years, Oklahoma proceeded to get busy and consider charges against three justices of the supreme court. Which would indicate that something is wrong with the political system in Oklahoma that may be, Oklahoma deserves commendation for its courage in washing dirty linen in public when it finds out that there is a need for it. And it's possible that other states might profit from example.

A start was made yesterday toward a definite campaign to promote land settlement along the line of dairying activities in Union and Wallowa counties. Representatives of chambers of commerce and commercial bodies will seek to have their organizations set aside moderate sums for an advertising campaign in middle western farm and dairy journals. We believe there is no commercial body in either county that can hope to undertake a more important and profitable piece of work than this. And with the enthusiasm created in our home communities will come a change among existing farmers to the more profitable operation of diversified lands. Spreading the gospel of the dairy cow, the hen, the pig, the sheep right here at home will do as much to promote farm prosperity as bringing in new settlers.

FOUR ESSENTIALS FOR SUCCESS

What does it take to make a big business man, an other and more dignified words, what are the fundamental qualifications of a modern business executive?

Colonel Leonard P. Ayres, vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., and one of the best known economists and statisticians in the country, has seen a good many such people; and the other day he sat down and tried to figure out just what qualities a man must have to enable him to assume leadership in the business, industrial or financial world. He finally decided that there are four essential qualities. His discussion of them is highly interesting.

At the head of the list Colonel Ayres places knowledge of the field in which a man is working. "I mean," he explains, "the practical working knowledge of his own field that enables a person to face with confidence the unending succession of ordinary problems that come along from day to day in the regular course of business."

Second he lists courage; the willingness to take a chance, to accept responsibility, to act decisively even when a man is not quite sure that his course of action is the best one available. And such courage, he explains, grows out of the first qualification. In the third place Colonel Ayres puts activity. "Persistent activity," he remarks, "is one of the essentials. Leadership is never won by inertia."

Colonel Ayres concludes: "The fourth quality is one for which we have no single word or term in English. It is the ability to influence the actions of other people. . . . It is a special social skill. Fundamentally, it appears to be the ability to see things from the other person's point of view, and by use of that ability the power to make him see things from your point of view."

Cultivating these four qualities, according to Colonel Ayres, is cultivating the habit of success. You might apply them to such big men as you happen to know and see how they measure up. Surely there is material in his observations for teachers and parents to consider carefully in child training.
