INCREASING PROSPERITY IS PREDICTED

B. W. Dunlap and Walter P. Brown, the committee's studies began a year ago and were financed by the Rockefeller and Carnegie foundations, while the National Bureau of Economic Research assisted in the survey. The committee was seeking for the cause and cure of unemployment, and for possibilities of diminishing the up-and-down movement of cycles of business activity and depression.

"The outstanding fact which is illuminated by this survey is that we cannot maintain our economic advantage," the document continued, "or fully hope to recognize our economic future, unless we consciously accept the principle of equilibrium, and apply it skillfully in every economic relation. Herein lies the danger; that through ignorance of economic principles or through selfish greed or inadequate leadership, the steady balance will be disturbed to our economic detriment. If natural resources are wastefully used; if money in quantity is taken out of production and employed for speculation; if any group develops a method of artificial price advancement which puts one commodity out of balance with others; if labor management or labor disorganizes the common interest; if the vital equilibrium will be destroyed for all. Our complex and intricate economic machine can produce, but to keep it producing continuously it must be maintained in balance. It would seem that we can go on with increasing activity. But we can do this only if we develop a technique of balance."

Advancing use of automatic machinery, it was agreed, caused "technological" unemployment, as displaced workers were forced to find jobs elsewhere than in their original industry. But the increasing output of goods, and increasing demand for sales and services in connection with their use, the increasing of leisure and consumption, were said to have furnished a field for filling the employment gaps.

THE GARDEN

THE SNOWY SWEET ALYSIUM
Sweet alyssum is ideal as an edging plant. Nothing in the way of annuals grows more easily and produces a greater wealth of bloom. The only care necessary is to thin it to give the plants at least six inches of room and let them go their way. They speedily develop a sheet of white that increases in depth and width as the season progresses. Alyssum does not transplant as readily as other annuals and there is little need to transplant it. Sow it where it is to grow and thin it out to the requisite distance.

The new compact forms are vastly superior to the old-fashioned type plant in giving a closer growing tuft with purer white flowers and less noticeable green centers. The one cultural point about sweet alyssum, and this not a very particular one, is that it is a lime-loving plant and will flourish better in lime soil than in acid soil. It will grow in the latter but not with the astonishing wealth of bloom that it produces in more congenial quarters. All it really asks is full sun.

Alyssum is also a fine subject with which to edge window boxes and for this purpose some of the older sorts of more trailing growth are even better than the compact types. It has a sweet, clean odor, not as cloying as many of the scented plants. Sow alyssum seed at once. It is a very hardy annual and often self-sows from the year before, so that once established you are reasonably sure of having it as a permanent and welcome guest. It is much used in combination with the blue lavender of the ageratum in edging.

During recent years a pale lilac form has been introduced. The mingling of this lavender and the white form in alternating groups of plants has become one of the most admired and popular edging schemes. It is a planting of colors published in a magazine a year ago that seems to have swept the country. It was very frequently seen last summer and was always much admired.

which rises steeply up towards the ancient grey stone pile, were waiting the mayor in his golden chains of office with his aldermen. The royal car halted and the smiling face of the ruler appeared. He grasped the hand of the mayor as he said: "Thank you very much. We are very pleased to be back in Windsor and I am very glad to see so many citizens here."

The king shook hands with the rest of the delegation and the car then swung up the hill towards home.
