GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Faced by strong circumstantial evidence pointing to Jerry Ogden as the slayer of his father, Lucy, his fiancée, loyally comes to his defense. She challenges the police theories and induces Luther MacNair, famous retired detective, to investigate the slaying. Her uncle, John Peebles, is awakened early in the morning by a prowler in his den. He grapples with the intruder but the latter escapes just before MacNair unexpectedly enters the room. Peebles reveals that the burglar tried to steal the famous Alex Peterson revolver loaded with gold bullets—a weapon that has become mysteriously linked with the murder of Andrew Ogden.

Chapter 19
A DROP OF BLOOD

"Where is the revolver?" MacNair demanded.

"I think I am lying on it," I said. A metallic object was pressing into the small of my back. "Here it is. The rascal had it leveled on me when I hit him with the golf club. He dropped it and used his own gun on you."

MacNair looked the pistol over. "Queer he should have known you had it."

I nodded. "It's just another of the many queerisms we have to explain. You'd better stay for breakfast. If it hadn't been for Lucy"—patting her hand and being kissed in return—"and you and Mrs. Moffitt I'd be past caring about breakfasts."

"No, thanks," he declined. "It's nearly dawn. I want to have a look around the Ogden grounds before Deacon and his men mess things up. That was my object in getting there at this ungodly hour. Evidence evaporates. Get on the job early is one of the maxims of my profession. There's another fun fond of, too. Stick to your job until it's finished." He grinned mischievously. "There, Peebles! I've taught you how to be a successful detective in two lessons. Write 'em down."

They helped me into a chair. The window, I saw, had been neatly cut with a diamond near the bolt. Mrs. Moffitt appeared properly skirted and carrying water, hot milk, and a dish of warm olive oil.

"I'll do it," Lucy offered, when I had drunk.

"Miss Lucy," my housekeeper whispered, "you are in your nightgown."

"Of course I am. Uncle John is in his pyjamas."

"Lucy," I interrupted dryly, "you might get me my dressing-gown."

She gave me a little gay-sad smile and tripped out of the room. Lucy insists Mrs. Moffitt is so modest that she bathes herself in the dark.

I called Polyandria. She sprang onto my bed and with Mrs. Moffitt pursued her ministrations. I turned her upside down and examined her claws. On the middle claw of the right foot I found what I was looking for. Mrs. Moffitt handed me a lens and I bent it on the claw. When I finally looked up MacNair was watching me ironically.

"Well?" he queried.

I chuckled. "There's a drop of blood on one of Polyandria's claws. She got between the rascal's legs and mine and scratched him. You had better look for a nigh with a scratch, MacNair."

"Not bad," he said curiously. "Another demonstration of my contention that one should get on the job early. A few minutes later and you wouldn't have found it." He peered through the lens. "The scratch will be on an exposed part of the man's body," he went on, "or his garments would have cleaned. Not the claw as the cat drew it back."

"An excellent point!" I remarked. "It hadn't occurred to me. Our task is again simplified; we look for a man with a scratch on an exposed part of his body."

"Hardly as simple as that," MacNair drawled.
"What do you mean?" I exclaimed, struck by his tone.
"I mean if we were to find a man with a scratch on, say, his wrist, it wouldn't necessarily follow that he'd killed Andrew Ogden."
At this, MacNair pulled up his right sleeve and revealed a red welt two inches long on the under side of his wrist.
"What do you say to that?" he chuckled.
"Good Lord!" I exclaimed. "How did you get it?"
"Coming through the window just now. You must trim that bristly nose of your, Peebles."
"Oh," I said in abashed tones. "I'm sorry. I've always been skeptical of the value of circumstantial evidence, too."
"But you shouldn't be," he informed me bluntly. "It's generally dependable. Unfortunately, circumstantial evidence is subject to human interpretation. Coincidence is the biggest magnet in the circumstantial cheese. Make allowance for coincidence and you'll get along nicely with circumstantial evidence. I shall still look for a man with a scratch, Peebles." MacNair tore a scrap of blotting paper from my desk, dabbed the drop of blood and placed the scrap in an envelope, which he pocketed.
When I had dismissed Mrs. Moffitt and Lucy had brought me my dressing-gown, I picked up the gold-mounted revolver. I ejected the cartridges into my palm. It was my intention to extract the powder from them, as I am averse to keeping more than one loaded weapon in the house, but MacNair objected.
"I wanted a pistol expert to go over the revolver and the cartridges. An expert may be able to give us some hint as to where they came from. Never mind reloading the revolver."
"How stupid of me!" I cried. "I never thought of getting an expert to look at them."
As I handed him the revolver and the cartridges one of the latter caught my eye and I drew it sharply back.
"Hello!" I exclaimed. "This cartridge has been tampered with."
I dug the bullet out with a jack-knife and looked for the powder. There was none. Instead, I saw what was evidently a wad of paper and I poked at it with a pin. It came out reluctantly.
"A message, uncle John," Lucy cried ecstatically.
When I had got the scrap of paper spread out on the desk it looked as if Lucy was right. It was dirty and brittle and had been torn off the top edge of a newspaper—a very old newspaper—and there was scarcely legible writing in indelible pencil on it. A date line was partly decipherable and to my astonishment, I made out: TOHIDITY, Monday, July, 1889.

"Terrific!" I gasped.

"Eighteen ninety-six," MacNair muttered.

"The writing, Uncle John—read it!" Lucy whispered.

And with the aid of the lens I did so.

...done for, Alex. Dillon got me, a kunk, but I shot a bullet in him, somewhere. Good-bye, old scout. You did best for me. I've a bad devil.

"Jerry!" Lucy echoed.

Tomorrow Last Showing of Arcade Talkie

Tomorrow will be your last chance to see "Women They Talk About," Warner Bros. great Vitaphone picture, now playing at the Arcade Theater. Anthony Goldsway did the exciting story which has been narrated by Robert Lord, Irene Rich and Audrey Ferris are featured, and the all-star cast includes William Collier, Jr., Claude Gillingwater, Anders Randolf, Jack Hanto and John Miljan. Lloyd Bacon directed. A big story of a political battle between a man and a woman in which cupid acts as referee and Vitaphone voices and music star the action to fever heat.

Emil Jannings In Picture At Star Friday

Portraying the role of a German-American, his exact stature, Emil Jannings gives another of his remarkable characterizations in his latest Paramount picture, "Sins of the Fathers," which comes to the Star Friday.

"Jannings," in a statement made to newspapermen recently, had the following to say about his newest role:

"I believed that in 'The Patriot' I had reached my peak as far as character work was concerned, and thought that I would never again be able to portray a role with such ardor, but when engaged in making 'Sins of the Fathers' I was conscious that there was a role that the American people would appreciate, a role portraying a man that every American knows about. I believe the American public will consider it my best to date."

Jannings was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., moved at an early age with his parents to Germany. He won fame that spread over the entire continent, and reversed the popular order of things by coming back to America already a star in his own right.

Jannings has an exceptional supporting cast in "Sins of the Fathers." Ruth Chatterton, the stage star, has the role opposite him. Others in the cast are Harry North, Zasu Pitts, Matthew Hotz and Harry Cording. Ludwig Berger, the celebrated European director, handled the direction of the film, his second American directed picture.

Goitre Not a Disease

Milwaukee Doctor Makes Remarkable Discovery

MILWAUKEE, Wis.—It has been brought to light by scientific research that goitre is not a disease and is not to be treated as such. Dr. A. A. Rock, Dept. B-28, Box 737, Milwaukee, Wis., a prominent goitre specialist for over 24 years, has perfected a different method of treatment for his patients that has proved remarkably successful. This same method is now being used for a home treatment of goitre cases all over the country with astonishing results. The doctor states that goitre is a condition which grows worse with neglect and recommends immediate attention no matter how small the growth may appear. He strongly opposes needless operations. Dr. Rock is the author of a book that tells in a simple way about treating goitre at home. He has published this book at his own expense and will send a copy free to anyone interested. Write him today. —Adv.
