GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Nathan Hyde, antique dealer, finally admits that the famous Alex Peterson revolver, which he sold to John Peebles, was brought to him by Furie, desert-rat, who visited Andrew Ogden a few hours before Ogden was slain. Hyde then reveals the startling fact that Ogden had demanded to know what he had done with the weapon. A coroner's jury charges the fugitive Jerry with killing his father, Henry Deacon, chief of police, makes an amazing discovery — another Peterson revolver, gold-mounted and loaded with gold bullets in—Ogden's desk.

Chapter 15
SHADOWS OF OGDEN'S PAST
I scarcely heard what MacNair said. Deacon's discovery had astonished me less than it had shocked my moral sense, for all day the trend of the evidence had been towards the conclusion implied by the finding of the pistol in Ogden's desk.

"You have given us another fact to put a theory on," Deacon said, "he was saying, 'A fact hard and square, fast and real.' 'The theory?' Henry demanded, bluntly.

"Very well," MacNair began, "consider the facts. This man Furie calls on Hyde yesterday afternoon. Hubbard overhears Ogden about the two words 'gold bullets.' Furie leaves, Ogden telephones Peebles and he stubbed as he sits at the instrument. Incidentally, Ogden has a card left at my house asking me to call.

"During the afternoon Peebles buys a gold-mounted pistol from Nathan Hyde. Early this morning Peebles's house is entered by a man who is after the pistol. One of the gold bullet-headed cartridges of the pistol is found to contain a message from a man named 'Jerry'. The message was written in 1896 and it accuses one James Dillon of murder. Later on, we find evidence that leads us to believe Ogden has been paying Dillon blackmail for 26 years. It also turns out that Ogden desperately wanted this gold-mounted pistol himself. Hyde, it appears, bought it from this man Furie who called on Ogden. We also find in Ogden's safe 26 poker chips and a deck of cards. Ogden was known to be prejudiced against card-playing.
