Plane Drops Engine in Midair

NEA San Francisco Bureau

On long trips too much time is lost by refueling and motor repair, says J. S. Abreu, San Francisco cabinetmaker, so he has invented a plane that drops its engine and fuel tank in midair and comes to earth as a glider for a new engine and fuel tank to be hooked on immediately. A single lever controls the work of separating the plane into two sections and a parachute lands the motor gently. Above is the new craft and at the right is Pilot Reed Vowles, chosen to make the first experimental flight. The arrow shows where the plane separates. With his ship, says Abreu, it would be possible to load a cargo in New York, seal it, change motors several times and avoid all delay caused by refueling.

Coral Formation

The reef-forming corals are the Madrepora and Moenandra, the latter dome-shaped and massive. They are confined to waters in which the temperature does not fall below 65 degrees Fahrenheit, though usually the water is warmer than this. Coral reefs are abundant in the West Indies and occur on the coast of Brazil.
