GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: During the blistering heat of the desert, Lucy rushes to Skull Valley to warn the police, Jerry Ogden, that the police charge with slaying his father. Lucy's uncle, Mr. Peebles, follows her to the murdered Andrew Ogden is believed to have ruled 30 years before as Alex Peterson, gambler and overlord. As Peebles searches the eerie buildings, Lucy and Jerry suddenly drive past but fail to see him. Peebles tries to follow them but discovers that the tires of his auto have been slashed.

Chapter 29
SHOTS FROM A TOMB
What of the man who had slashed my tires? Dillon, undoubtedly. Knowing that Jerry was in Torridity, he had come to plant the flannel. The children, I decided, didn't know he was here and he may not have intended to kill. I certainly knew I was here. Why in the name of common sense hadn't I brought a pistol?

I don't know what made me think of Purie just then. MacNair had assumed that Purie knew something about the Two Brothers mine; perhaps, indeed, had brought the bit of quartz. Moreover, Hubbard's description of him strongly suggested the old desert rat type. Mightn't Purie be a relic of Torridity's vanished prosperity? Was it Purie's presence I had sensed in the town instead of Dillon's? Was it, indeed, Purie who had slashed my tires? And had Dillon, after "planting" the flannels, taken himself off? I began to wonder. MacNair had connected Purie and the quartz specimens with the mine. I had concluded Lucy had found Jerry there. After swallowing a sandwich I set off up the street towards the flank of mountain behind the town. On the outskirts my feet found an indistinct trail of sorts and I let them carry me along it.

The sun was declining towards the Skeletons, but the wind blew fast as a dragon's breath and in its teeth whined that awful I had heard as I drove towards Torridity. I thought it hissed at me, "Go back, you fool!" A thin sand haze hung in the air. A windstorm impended, I felt sure, and common sense urged me to go back; but just then I saw the buildings of an abandoned mining property. Heading into the bite of the wind, I quickly identified the property as the Two Brothers by the huge mass of splintered rock in front of the entrance to the main bore.

It took me half an hour to explore the property. In vain and a-creek in the burning wind, the buildings were a sorry mess, but the machinery was in fair condition. From the "tailings" dump I followed the ore cart rails up to the great pile of debris which blocked the entrance. To remove it would be a sizable job.

In a barn-like structure was the police car. Lucy had commandeered it. It cheered me mightily. Leaving the car where it was, for the time being, I started back along the flank of the mountain.

The sun was lower. The wind had quickened; its eerie note shrilled a little. After I had gone 100 yards beyond the limits of the Two Brothers property I came upon a narrow gash shaded deep into the flinty mountainside which I had noticed as I came up. A vague trail led into the gash, and the imprint of shoes showed in a sprinkling of sand at my feet.

Striking into the gash, I found myself between towering walls of reddish rock which gradually widened into a sizable canyon that cut into the heart of the Skeletons. I had gone some 200 yards when I noticed a "V"-shaped joint in the south slope of the canyon. As I approached the joint I saw it was really a cavern-like slash in the rock wall.

I had come within 20 feet of the

Greta Garbo Is Featured In "Wild Orchids"

Greta Garbo, who during her entire residence in Hollywood has never participated in the social whirl of the screen capital, preferring the seclusion of her Santa Monica apartment, had to learn the newest ballroom steps for her latest screen vehicle, "Wild Orchids," which comes Wednesday to the Star theater.

Sedate Scandinavian waltz rhythms and the syncopated fast-moving dance numbers popular in the United States are as far apart, obviously, as a tropical breeze and a Canadian snowstorm. Miss Garbo's early training in the principles of the dance at the Royal Dramatic academy in Stockholm proved of little value when it came to going through a half-dozen hurried fox trots and semi-Charlestons. Dance instructors were hurriedly summoned from a Los Angeles school and the young Swedish actress quickly re-learned the basic points of 1928 ballroom dancing, western hemisphere style.

There are many who aspire for screen fame who struggle for years to attain it, but there is one popular leading man who had fame literally thrust upon him. The player is Norman Kerry who plays opposite Pola Negri in the latter's starring picture entitled, "The Woman From Moscow," now showing at the Star theater.

Reared in a small village outside of New York City, when Kerry was 17, he entered his father's business. He was sent to San Francisco later as the western representative for his father's firm. On a visit to Los Angeles he went on a sightseeing tour of the motion picture studios. That was in 1916.

film company, James Young, a director approached Kerry and asked him if he could start work on his picture the next day.

"Certainly," replied Kerry. He resumed his film work after the war and has appeared in some of the big hits of filmdom including "The Merry Widow," "The Phantom of the Opera," and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" among others.

His role in the Negri film is said to be one of the best characterizations he has ever done.

"Mother's Boy" Now Playing At Arcade

Robert Gleckler, owner of the fashionable charet seen in the Pathé all dialogue picture production, "Mother's Boy," starring Morton Downey which will be seen and heard at the Arcade theater today, is a stage player of reputation who appeared in "Broadway," "Gentlemen of the Press," "Hingside" and other stage hits in New York. Morton Downey is "Broadway's golden-voiced tenor" and since several other popular songs with fine effect. Other players featured in the production include Helen Chandler, Barbara Bennett, Beryl Mercer, Osmond Perkins and John T. Doyle.
