Edward Gallagher Dead In New York

NEW YORK, May 25 (AP)—Edward Gallagher, of the once-famous vaudeville team of Gallagher and Sheen, is dead.

The man who rose to fame and fortune in 1920 on the popular song "Mister Gallagher and Mister Sheen," died peacefully and painlessly at a Queens sanitarium yesterday. He had entered the sanitarium last February after a collapse in an unsuccessful attempt at a stage come-back.

Except for his former wife, Helen Gallagher, he was virtually deserted during his last months.

A newspaper headline says "Eminent 'Theatre' Checked." Now we wish someone would kindly figure out how the thing ever got started.

GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Unable to follow Lucy and Jerry out of the ghost town of Torridity because the tires of his auto were slashed, Peebles decides to explore the deserted Two Brothers mine, owned by the murdered Andrew Ogden. As he starts to enter a slash in the rock at one side of the mine, a bullet strikes over his head. A second burst off his hat. He leaves, convinced that the unseen marauder is guarding the entrance to a new vein of gold. A furious sandstorm springs up suddenly and lashes Peebles mercilessly. He finally stumbles into an old building.

Chapter 21
STALKED BY A KILLER
The wind yammered and snarled like a regiment of baboons. Blasts volleyed in through the open door. I had heard and read of the sandstorms of Skull Valley scouring the enamel of a car and grinding the glass of a windshield until it was opaque.

The thought of Lucy and Jerry out in it gave me a bad minute or two. But I reflected that Jerry had a sound head on his shoulders, and nothing serious would be likely to happen to them.

More comfortable in mind and body, I looked about and decided I had tumbled into Lundy's Place. I got some of the sand out of my eyes and stood up. My head felt twice its normal size and my legs were as weak as straws. I was feeling around for a chair when I stopped sharply, my body turned to stone.

Ever since I had come into this graveyard town my senses had been abnormally acute. The impression that I was being watched was at me again, stronger than ever. I could have sworn there was some one other than myself in the building.

A few seconds delay meant death—finally the door closed

There came a toll in the roar of the storm, and suddenly, out of the profound silence, a definite indoor sound broke on my eardrums. It wasn't the sound that brought me up rigid, heart pounding in my throat; it was the sense of danger that came with it. Some one was in the room. Why didn't he declare himself? Who was he? The man who had fired on me in the canyon? No, he could not have got down here before me, Dillon, then? This was more probable.

Fear held me as in a vice. An unknown, unseen enemy sends the horrors up and down my spine. Moreover, I had no weapon of any sort, whereas Dillon would be armed. I pondered swiftly, desper-

THEATERS

Greta Garbo Fascinating In "Wild Orchids"

Greta Garbo, who is undoubtedly one of the most fascinating personalities ever to appear on the silver screen, has a part that should delight her fan following and win her thousands of new admirers in "Wild Orchids," new M-G-M film now showing at the Star theater.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer evidently had a happy inspiration in commissioning John Cotton to write an original story for Miss Garbo, Cotton, author of "The Shanghai Gesture" and co-author of "Rain," two of the biggest hits in theatrical history, selected the island of Java, off the Malay Peninsula, as the locale for his plot, which is replete with action, thrills, love, suspense and picturesque glamour.

Miss Garbo's unusual personality, her irresistible femininity and her mobility of expression find an ideal setting in this intensely dramatic story of the tropics. Her screen characterization is one of those rare acting performances that stand out a long time after one has seen the picture.

Lewis Stone is excellent in his part and Miss Asher has the best screen role that has been given him since he came to Hollywood a couple of years ago.

For all those who like tense melodrama coupled with a thrilling and out-of-the-ordinary love story, "Wild Orchids" is a dish not to be passed up.

Headlong over a broken chair and slid along the floor. I squirmed into the further corner of a partitioned alcove next to the wall. My hands fell upon the back of a chair. I picked it up, whirled it around the alcove partition and let go.

The chair went home. The man cursed and the light beam swept downward; it fell through the veil of the hall. A tinkle of glass as it struck the floor was faintly audible.

I sensed the man's approach. I heard his excited breathing, and I felt him, at last, standing in front of the alcove, gun leveled. The pistol cracked again. I must have been hidden, or he would have hit me. The flash showed me exactly where he was. Tensing my body, I let myself go.

I struck him like a battering-ram and he staggered to the balcony rail, dropping the pistol. Before I could follow up my advantage he left me bodily and flung me against the wall in the alcove.

My head as well as my body struck the wall, and I passed into that borderland between sensibility and unconsciousness. My enemy was groping for his pistol. I could not lift a hand to stop him. Then I made a curious discovery. My head and shoulders were not piled up against the wall, as I had supposed, but were lying in a room behind the wall. Part of it had swung in when I was thrown against it, and the upper portion of my body yand gone with it.

Where my strength came from I know not, but I suddenly found myself wriggling painfully forward into the room. Two-thirds of my body were in when I collapsed, exhausted. Again strength was given me, and I got myself completely into the room.

A dozen seconds may have elapsed before I was able to grope for the door. It swung slowly before me, and I got myself completely into the room.

"Dear God," I sobbed, "I've got to shut it!"

Crack! The bullet ripped through woodwork and by the flash I got a glimpse of some one leaping into the alcove. Just then the door swung to and a latch clicked. My hand encountered a flat bolt. I drove it home, and sank in a huddle on the floor.

Safe for the moment—has Peebles escaped this killer? A startling climax in tomorrow's chapter.

"Little Wildcat" Coming To Arcade Theater

The selection of Audrey Ferris to play the title role in "The Little Wildcat" as a member of the all-star cast of the Warner Bros. Vitaphone feature production marks the attainment of another triumphant rung in the sensational rise of this sparkling screen player.

Miss Ferris has been in pictures only a little more than a year, but having played several small ingenue parts in Warner productions, succeeded in registering her talent so strikingly that she was accorded distinction as a 1928 Wampas "Baby Star."

She has since been elevated, by a series of excellent portrayals, to leading lady roles. Now in the title role of "The Little Wildcat" she appears definitely slated for stellar recognition.

With her in the splendid cast of "The Little Wildcat" are Doris Dawson, James Murray, George Fawcett, Robert Edison and Hal-lam Cooley. The story is laid in the South, Miss Ferris and Miss Dawson playing sisters, the grand-daughters of George Fawcett in the role of an aristocratic and domineering Civil War veteran.

Commercial aviation plays an important part in the plot in which humor mixes freely with romance. Ray Enright directed. "The Little Wildcat" comes to the Arcade theater Thursday for a run of three days.
