NEW YORK GAP—Recognition of workers, as a means of restoring pride in craftsmanship and encouraging individual artistry, is sought by the American Institute of Architects.

A report of the committee on industrial relations says: "It seems possible that already there may have been started a great countryside impulse that will bring back to us of this commercial age something of the ancient spirit of craftsmanship that was the pride and glory of long ago."

AT THE THEATERS

"Why Be Good" Features At The Star

America's carefree, unchaperoned youth, super-sophisticated and scornful of propriety, is colorfully pictured in the Star theater's attraction, "Why Be Good?" in which Colleen Moore plays the stellar role.

The story of this comedy-drama is of the type that first carried Miss Moore to the heights of popularity, although the plot is decidedly original and the characterizations of the most up-to-date variety. Miss Moore appears as a typical example of the modern girl, her costumes and personality being the last word, and her speech full of flippant wisecracks.

Although the story of "Why Be Good?" is essentially humorous, there are moments of serious drama interspersed with the frivolous episodes, the question propounded in the title being answered in a dramatic climax that is said to equal the finest work Miss Moore has ever contributed to the screen.

Neil Hamilton, in the chief supporting role, is seen as Miss Moore's leading man for the first time, while other playing important roles are Booth Rosing, Edward Marindel and Louis Natheaux.

H. B. Warner In "Doctor's Secret" At Arcade

H. B. Warner, stage and screen star, makes his debut in a Paramount picture as the principle masculine player in "The Doctor's Secret," the all-talking pictureization of James M. Barrie's noted play.

Although he has been in the films during the past fourteen years, Warner, through some freak of circumstances, has never played in a picture bearing the Paramount trademark. He made his initial appearance in 1914 in a picture produced by Jesse L. Lasky, but this was made before Lasky and Adolph Zukor formed the Paramount organization.

Warner's role in "The Doctor's Secret" is one of the most powerful of his long career as an actor. He enacts the part of Ruth Chatterton's husband in the Barrie play and has an opportunity to use his stage-trained voice to the fullest advantage.

In addition to Warner and Miss Chatterton, the cast of "The Doctor's Secret" includes John Lederer, the young English actor, Robert Edison, Wilfred Hyde, Ethel Wales, Nancy Price and Finch-Smith. The production was directed by William C. de Mille, and comes to the Arcade theater Thursday for three days.
