and domestic difficulties. Her first professional appearance was in a stock company in Philadelphia before she was 18 years old.

She scored a great success in 1911 in a Broadway production of "Overnight," the beginning of her stardom.

In 1913 she married Orson D. Munn, patent lawyer, and retired from the stage for seven years. There were two daughters, Elinor and Louise, now about 14 and 12 years old.

In 1922 she was divorced from Munn and in 1927 married Wallace Eddinger, widely known comedian, in Los Angeles.

Her last important appearance was in "Possession" in which she was being starred by Edger Selwyn.

when social consciousness came to him that he began his upward climb to the heights upon which he stands today.

"Perhaps in this we find the clue to a higher civilization than any we have yet attained.

"Just as the material sciences have vastly improved the condition of mankind, so the social sciences seem now to have entered upon a new career of usefulness to the world."

In discussing social progress, Mr. Lowden said: "A growing complexity in all the affairs of men has always gone with an advancing civilization. As science is largely responsible for this growing complexity in affairs, so science alone can enable us to so order this complexity that it can be dealt with effectually. To meet the demands of this increasing complexity we must enlist all the old which science has to give. It is a hopeful sign of the times that political science especially is now concerning itself with the actual facts in government. It is finding more and more its close relation to the other sciences."

"I still believe that representative government which our fathers sought to establish is the best hope of earth. I can not close my eyes, though, to the fact that it is now on the defensive."
