GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Peebles is started by Mrs. Lundy's revelation that Alex Peterson—the counterpart of the murdered Andrew Ogden in Skull Valley—had shot her husband 20 years ago. She tells the story of Peterson, who came to Torridity with $10 in his pocket and amassed great wealth. Describing her husband, she mentions his eight-sided eyeglasses. Peebles is intrigued by the possible connection between Lundy's glasses, Parie's powerful eyeglasses, the marked cards in Ogden's safe, the "poker game that cracked the town" and Peterson's shooting Lundy.

Chapter 32
WHAT ABOUT "HARRY?"
"Joe and Peterson ruled Torridity," Mrs. Lundy went on, "much as political bosses rule our cities. Joe hated Peterson because of his success and his good looks. Joe wanted to ruin Peterson and I suppose that shooting came out of his hatred. The town was too small for both of them, and Joe would be a dangerous enemy. Is there anything else, Mr. Peebles?"

Her question disconcerted me. It implied that she had little more to tell. I was bitterly disappointed, for actually she had told me nothing that illuminated the problem of Andrew's death.
"I was only here a week," she went on, reading my thoughts, "and thankful to get away. I always recall that week with longing. After my return to Los Angeles I heard nothing from my husband."
"But when he was brought back you surely heard what had happened," I expostulated. "About the shooting, I mean. It's dreadfully important, Mrs. Lundy."
She shook her head sorrowfully. "Joe came to me on a stretcher. I have had him ever since. All I know is that he was shot—by Alex Peterson."

"Who brought him to you?"
"Torridity was abandoned about that time and Joe was taken to Pendleton by his men. One of the men telegraphed me from Pendleton that Joe was there—that he had been shot by Peterson, and that a doctor who had been working as a miner had attended him. I had Joe brought to my home and I have since heard nothing from any one who lived in Torridity at that time. And I don't want to!"

I meditated a moment. "You mentioned Alex Peterson's brother, Jerry," I said hopefully. "Can you tell me anything about him?"
"Very little. I only saw him once. He had his brother's lean face and arrogant eyes, but I heard that he was wild and undisciplined. I shouldn't be surprised if the boy came to a bad end."
I could not answer for I was thinking of what Deacon and I had stumbled over in the Two Brothers mine.

"Didn't the size of that check Ogden gave you surprise you?"
"Yes, it did," she said frankly. "I had been selling subscriptions along the avenue and I met Mr. Ogden at the gate. He didn't seem interested until I happened to mention my name. Then he looked at me sharply and asked me if my husband's name had been 'Joe.' I said it was—that he was still alive. He looked at me hard, then he invited me into the library. His first question was the one you asked me. Was I the wife of Joe Lundy who kept a resort in Torridity 20 years ago? The question angered me, but he promised me $100 for the answer. I would answer it, so I told him what he wanted to know."
"How did he take it?"
"He seemed dumbfounded. And when I told him that my husband had not died in Torridity and that he was still alive, his face crimsoned and he began to pace up and down the room, muttering to himself. Then he sat down and wrote me that check for $1,000. You may imagine my surprise. He asked me for my address and showed me out."

"Where is your husband now?"
"I went on."
"At our home in Los Angeles."
"Is he able to get about?"
"Yes."
"Mrs. Lundy, have you ever heard of a poker game played for a man's life?"
She frowned. "Yes, I have. My husband has talked about such a game in delirium several times."
"Has it ever occurred to you that the shooting of your husband and that poker game he talked of in delirium were connected?"
"Yes," she admitted. "It has occurred to me. But I don't know. And I don't care—now."
"Mrs. Lundy, you did not recognize Andrew Ogden?"
"Recognize him! I never saw him before." Her face became thoughtful. "No, I am not sure, now you speak of it. There was something familiar about him. His face, his voice, his manner—I don't know which."
"You haven't guessed why he gave you that check?"
"Her nostrils quivered a little, but her face was calm."
"He gave it to you," I said slowly, gripping tensely the edge of my desk, "because—20 years ago—he was Alex Peterson."
She stared at me, becoming ashen of face.
"So that was it!" she cried. "A thousand dollars to pay for 20 years of misery! The best of my life given to looking after a broken hulk while Alex Peterson grew rich! Well, I am glad he is dead! I wish my hand had driven that dagger into his neck!"

But as I stared at the woman, shocked by her venomous words which, in the intensity of their bitterness, I had never heard equaled on human lips, her face was slowly transforming.
"No," she said, in a rapid voice, lifting up her spiritual face. "I didn't mean that. I should thank him, for through him I came to the truth."
And as I marveled at the transforming power of these mystic beliefs she dropped her eyes to mine. "You self-complacent people with your traditional creeds think our faith absurd. You call us neurotic. You say that we are afraid of reality, that we are trying to escape from life. We are! And can you blame us, when reality has made life unbearable? My faith has anchored me to sanity!" She stood up. "Is there anything else?"
"Only this," I muttered, subdued of spirit. "Go down to police headquarters and tell them what you have told me. If you don't, the first policeman you meet will take you up."
I let her out through the front door and gave her the lilies Mrs. Lundy had left on the porch. When she had gone I stood in the hot sunlight thinking over what she had told me. Andrew, in his Alex Peterson days, had shot the resort-keeper, Joe Lundy. Was this why Dillon had blackmailed him? If it were—and surely it was—no wonder Andrew had given the woman a check for $1,000! The irony of being blackmailed 25 years for a crime one hadn't committed staggered me. Poor Andrew! Had he become blind with fury and reverting to his former reckless character, attacked Dillon and been killed by the man? Perhaps. But why had he shot Lundy? And what about the man, "Jerry"? On the threshold of my den I stopped with a shout of joy. Jerry—dressed in khaki—and I were standing at the French window, hand in hand! And Deacon was behind them.

Jerry and Lucy are back! Jerry makes a startling revelation in tomorrow's chapter.

OFFICE CAT

McLuselah lived to be over nine hundred years old. In those days they didn't know anything about deadly carbon monoxide, halitosis, or what have you?
Customer: "Give me a saw without poison."
Clerk: "What do you mean?"
Customer: "One whose teeth won't fall out."
"If you had one day to live, how would you spend it?"
"Laughing at my creditors."
It takes an income of six figures to get a man in the rotogravure section, but one figure will get a girl there.

We noticed in a newspaper that there is enough nicotine in one cigar to kill 32 rabbits. But when will we ever see 32 rabbits smoking one cigar?
What is wisdom but having a great deal to say and keeping silent.
Even automobiling might become monotonous if there did not go flat occasionally.
A little boy in Southern California was buying his first glimpse of snow. "Oh, mother, what is it—what is it?" He shouted excitedly. "Why, that is snow, George. Whatever did you think it was?"
"Snow. Why, it looks like popped rain."

More than 729 gallons of contraband alcohol disappeared from its storage place in Kansas City recently. And its storage place was right in the police station, too. That's funny!

AT THE THEATERS

"House of Horror" Coming To The Star

Hollywood dealers in antiques probably sighed with relief when "The House of Horror" was completed on the First National lot, and the big vans began delivering the hundreds of rare pieces of art and furniture that had been rented for use in that picture.
The story of this new mystery thriller which features Chester Conklin and Louise Fazenda, is laid in an old New York antique shop and as a consequence a number of great rooms had to be filled to overflowing with antiques.
No studio property room, even one so well equipped as that at First National, could supply such a demand, so the shops of Hollywood were rented, in some cases almost completely, and the stocks moved to the big stages.
