Mining Men Are Meeting Today In Baker City

BAKER, Ore., June 15 (AP)—Mining men from all sections of Eastern Oregon gathered here today for the annual meeting of the Eastern Oregon Mining association.

The meeting opened with the reports of J. C. Bowen, president, and William E. North, executive secretary. Dean A. E. Drueker, Washington State college school of mines, delivered an address on the need for organization among mining men.

Those attending the meeting met at an informal luncheon here at noon. General Daves' visit to Windsor marked the first time that King George has received a foreign diplomat since his illness began last November.

Hoover to Name 8 Men for Farm Board Positions

By James L. West (Associated Press Staff Writer) WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15 (AP)—President Hoover plans to move as rapidly as possible in selecting the eight men who will administer the new farm relief law, the most important independent agency of the federal government established in more than a decade.

This board, the members of which will draw cabinet officer salaries of $12,000 annually and have at their command a revolving fund of $500,000, is to have an authority and standing in agriculture comparable to that of the Interstate Commerce Commission in transportation and the federal reserve board in finance.

A formidable list of candidates already has been presented to the president and he is believed to have about made up his mind who is to be the chairman. The two men standing foremost in the general endorsements are James C. Stone of Lexington, Ky., president of the Burley Tobacco Co-operative association, and Carl Williams of Oklahoma.

Others whose names have been mentioned more or less prominently in connection with the board membership included D. O. Moser of Texas, a cotton co-operative official; B. L. Corey of Scarsdale, N. Y., who also has had large experience in cooperative organizations; former Representative William Black of Texas and William H. Marshall of Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

There has been speculation as to whether Mr. Hoover would offer a place on the board to Frank A. Lowden, former governor of Illinois and a candidate for the republican presidential nomination against Mr. Hoover.

month and 12 days of age, are to be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at the Snodgrass and Zimmerman mortuary. The Rev. J. George Walk, of the Presbyterian church, will officiate. The body will be laid to rest in the Masonic cemetery. He is survived by his widowed mother and other relatives and friends.

Mr. Dahl's body will be sent to Spokane tonight, where his parents make their home. Funeral services will be held there. Miss Marjorie Condit and her father and Mr. Taul are going to Spokane to attend the funeral.

Mr. Dahl came here in the summer of 1927 and for several months was one of the publishers of The Reminder, later joining with Mr. Taul in the building of the Crystal Plunge.

YOUNG STOWAWAY CALLED "LITTLE RASCAL" BY FLIER

(Continued from Page 1) we. How about that?" Then he added, "Anyway we have plenty of time to get to Paris after we get some gas."

Schreiber said he and his friend flipped a coin to see which would take. He drew the Yellow Bird and crawled into the tail cavity where he was sheltered from casual view by struts and the baggage. He and his friend previously had reconnoitered and remarked that there was room for a person in the tail, noting also that none of the aviators ever seemed to look back there.

He planned to go aboard just before the aviators reached the plane to prepare for a start. He knew there were people about who might see him but he boldly got in and took his chance.

Glad to Reach Land He said his ride was not always pleasant but he was decidedly glad to get his feet on earth again. He added he was ready now for a parade in Paris and the welcoming yells of thousands who expected to greet "us."

Describing the discovery that a stowaway was aboard Rene Le Fevre told the Associated Press correspondents: "He came creeping out from the tail of the ship. He was on his knees at first, but when finally he stood up he had sea legs and swayed from side to side."

"We would have been people of little heart if we had turned back and put him off, or—laughing—" "I think you believe we were going to do."

"But our own fear for our safety was as nothing compared with the trepidation we felt for him and the assurance we had that if something happened we would be blamed for not having put him off."

Armeno Lotti said: "If I have not committed a crime on this voyage I shall never commit one. My indignation when I saw the boy crawling from the tail of the plane was so great I was much tempted to throw him off and lighten our load, which was just sufficient to keep us from achieving our goal."

The youth knew few words of Spanish, but those few he told some who talked to him he was a vaudeville actor and that his partner was from France. He said he hid in the tail of the plane on the night prior to the flight.

He was unable to sleep all last night, the clamor of the little town's inhabitants outside the hotel keeping all four awake.

Schreiber considered he had placed himself in the hall of fame by stowing away on the Yellow Bird and seemed oblivious of the danger from the pointmen he had caused the gallant French aviators.

YELLOW BIRD WILL GO ON TO FRANCE

(Continued from Page 1) der great emotion as the plane landed and expressed complete joy when he set his foot on solid earth. He found no one to talk to among the Spaniards who crowded around and seemed lost at the fusa made over him in the strange language.

Assault explained that he was not discovered until the plane was in full flight, when they decided against turning back to put him off.

Plane Not Damaged The plane was not damaged in landing. It needed only fuel and a new "starter" for the landing gear in order to take off and continue its flight. The original "starter" they had jettisoned on the course of their flight in order to lighten the plane after they discovered Schreiber aboard.

This little town, containing but a few hundred people and decedeez of the recondense of the Spanish royal family were coming here for sea bathing, gave the aviators a tumultuous welcome, affording them their first taste of hero worship.

Civil guards formed a cordon around the plane to save it from souvenir hunters as the four adventurers left it for town and dinner—something more substantial than bananas and oranges on which they had subsisted in crossing the straits. The Spaniards pined them with innumerable questions which they answered as well as they could through their interpreter. They said they were satisfied with their trip.

Assault added: "It was hard going at times, we experienced almost every variety of weather and climate but generally the wind favored us. The machine behaved splendidly, and drove triumphantly and unflinching through fog, wind, rain, a zone of cold and one heavy storm."

"The storm obliged us to quit the steamboat lane we followed at the start and then we flew southward lengthening the course."

When the hospitable Spaniards relaxed their attention a little the aviators went to the post office and deposited the mail they had brought for Paris.

16th Crossing The landing of the Yellow Bird here completed the 16th crossing of the Atlantic in a heavier than air machine, and the eighth eastward crossing. There has been but one westward crossing of the north Atlantic by an airplane, although dirigibles have crossed five times.

There was a noteworthy coincidence in the flight's completion yesterday, June 14, 1929, which was the tenth anniversary of the completion of the first non-stop transatlantic flight from St. Johns, Newfoundland, to Clifden, Ireland, on June 14, 1919, by Captain John Alcock and Lieutenant Arthur W. Brown, British officers. They flew a Vickers Vimy bomber and made the 1900 miles in 16 hours and 12 minutes.

Radiator Almost Dry When finally they landed the plane's radiator was practically dry and there were but a few drops of gasoline left in the tank. Had it not been for sighting the beach here they might have continued a few miles further and had to attempt a forced landing in the fast gathering dusk at a locality totally unfit for the purpose.

Rene Le Fevre, when asked what the effect of the young stowaway's appearance before the others in the plane had been answered home or less jokingly: "At first our indignation was so great we started to open the door and throw him into space but we finally permitted him to continue with us, although we knew the difficulty the excess weight would cause."

Le Fevre said that they encountered the most surprising weather conditions with rain, cold, and once a storm of hurricane proportions. The temperature, he said, was often below zero (Centigrade), necessitating flying much lower than they would have otherwise chosen to do. The navigator attributed the fuel shortage to the stowaway, just as Assolant had done.

FARM RELIEF BILL SIGNED BY PRESIDENT (Continued from Page 1) still remains before the senate. In signing the bill today, however, Mr. Hoover had the satisfaction of knowing that one of the major problems of the campaign had been acted upon despite predictions by opponents that the farm law would prove inadequate.
