GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Jerry Ogden tells the story of his father's last night as Alex Peterson, overlord of Torridity—a story revealed by Andrew Ogden just before he was murdered. Peterson's younger brother, "Jerry," was sentenced by miners' trial to hang for robbery. Defying the men pursuing his brother, Alex looks "Jerry" into the Peterson mine and demands that they delay their hanging until morning so that he may examine their evidence. Alex tries to bribe Joe Lundy, whose gold "Jerry" admits stealing, but Lundy, fearing the mob, refuses. They agree to wait until sunrise.

Chapter 34 A NIGHT OF HORROR

Deacon and I sat breathless as Jerry paused momentarily. The suspense was terrific and it was a distinct relief when Jerry resumed. "It was just nine by dad's watch. The sun rose at four. He had seven hours' grace and he knew he was in for the blindest night of his life. "Dad was ready to spend every dollar he possessed to save Uncle Jerry but whether it was an honest acceptance of his offer that Lundy had in mind, or not, he couldn't decide. That sense of "something else" buzzing in Lundy's head wouldn't let go of him. "Dad struck off towards the town, Burke, Webb and Elch fell in 100 feet or so behind him. A terrific din was pouring out of Lundy's Peterson saw Lundy's ghostly proposal coming—it staggered him. Place. Shouting, laughing, women squealing, rattling on a tiny piano, and all that. A hush fell as dad entered. He went up to the bar and bought a drink. "Where's Lundy?" he asked. "The bartender seemed nervous. 'Instants,' he replied. "As dad made his way towards the gallery stair, Fitch, Burke and Webb came in. "Dad stood at the top of the stair and looked down into the hall. The piano had started again and the crowd was milling around the floor or drinking at the bar. They all seemed animated by the same impulse: to have as good a time as Lundy's Place could offer them, dad said. As he watched them, it came over him that they were all of a kind. They might have been members of a single body. "Shen," dad muttered to himself. Think alike, act alike. Whether it's lynching a man or swallowing booze. Wax! Get 'em hot enough and you can shape 'em any way you please! "These were his thoughts as he stared down into the hall and I mention them because they bear on what follows. The comparison to wax sent dad's eyes to a colored poster tacked in the wall of the stair. It went something like this, dad said:

You'll get the significance of that presently. "Several of the alcoves and some of the rooms were occupied, but the alcove in the northwest corner of the gallery was empty, and dad went towards it. This alcove was always empty for the reason that a door in the north wall, close to the Men wonder why the fool moth insists on flying into the flame and then they go and try to heat the engine at the crossing.

The height of bad luck is to see a nice vacant parking space when one doesn't want to stop.

He—"Shall we sit in the parlor?" She—"No, I'm too tired—let's go out and play tennis."

In some of the places where they sell "moonshine" they now give you a whole broom with every drink. The broom is to brush yourself off after you get up from the floor.

"Clubman: 'I've struck a perfectly priceless idea. I've arranged to give a man $10,000 on condition that he believes me of all my worries?'"

Friend: "That's fine, but where are you going to get to $10,000?" "Clubman: "Ah, that will be his first worry."

Contrary to a somewhat prevalent opinion, we wish to go on record as being of the conviction that two half-wits do not make a wit.

Another chap, a Scotchman perhaps—recalled that it once took two sheep a year to produce enough material for a track and now two silk worms can do the job in an afternoon.

was ghostly, but nothing else had presented itself, or seemed likely to. And Jerry was waiting for him... a rope ahead... Jerry, his kid brother! And it was he who had brought him here!

What is Lundy's ghostly proposition? Can Peterson win his brother's freedom? Continue the story with Monday's chapter.
