NOTICE OF SHERIFF'S SALE

Notice is hereby given, that I have received execution and order of sale, issued out of and under the seal of the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon for Union County, dated the 7th day of June, 1928, in the action therein pending where-in State Industrial Accident Commission of Oregon is plaintiff and C. E. Rogers is defendant, to me directed, upon a judgment in the sum of $28.76, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from May 28th, 1928, and the further sum of $5.50 costs, in which said execution I am commanded to satisfy said sum out of the personal property of said defendant, or if sufficient cannot be found, then out of the real property belonging to him, on and after May 28th, 1928.

Now THEREFORE, by virtue and authority of said writ, and in obedience to its commands, having found no personal property, I do hereby levy upon the following described real property standing in the name of said defendant on May 28th, 1928, to-wit:

Lots 11 and 12 in Block 142 of Chaplin's addition to the City of La Grande, Union County, Oregon, and I will, on Tuesday, the 31st day of July, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day, at the front door of the court house in La Grande, Union County, Oregon, sell at public auction the above described real property, and all the right, title, interest and equity of the defendant therein, to the highest bidder for cash, the proceeds of said sale to be applied in satisfaction of said judgment and decrees, including costs and accruing costs of execution and sale.

Dated at La Grande, Oregon, this 10th day of June, 1928.

JESSE HESTER, Sheriff of Union County, Oregon.

GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Jerry Ogden tells his father's story of the night, which changed Alex Peterson, picturesque gambler, into Andrew Ogden, wealthy philanthropist. Peterson's younger brother had been sentenced to hang for robbery by a miners' trial, Peterson, defying the mob, locks his brother into the "Two Brothers" mine and demands that the hanging be delayed until morning.

"Jerry," the brother, admits stealing Joe Landy's gold and Peterson foresees in Landy's invitation to play poker some ghastly proposal, probably a gamble for the life of "Jerry." Desperate, Alex accepts, posing a couple of pairs. Dad's three aces were good over the three fours in MacCoy's hand, and he drew in the pot.

"For a minute or two dad had been aware of feet moving behind him and as he glanced over his shoulder he saw that half a dozen men, Fitch and Webb among them, stood around the door. There were many more behind them and he could hear others coming up the stairs. They must have sensed something of the significance of the game, he said, for none of them moved towards the table. When these men to see the greatest victory of his life—or his ruin?"

"Richey shuffled, Landy cut, and Richey dealt. The men at the door were quiet now. You could feel the tension quickening, dad said. "On Richey's deal dad got two jacks which he drew to, MacCoy asked for three cards, Landy for two. Richey took three cards. Dad had caught another jack and on the strength of it bet a stack of rods. MacCoy raised the stack. Landy meditated, narrowed his eyes at dad for a moment, then saw the raise. Richey dropped and Peterson contented himself with a call. But dad's jacks had come back on him—Landy had filled a straight with his two-card draw.

"Dad said the pressure outside had forced several of the men into the room. The room began to vibrate of cut plug and burning kerosene and sweat. There wasn't much talk. Dad won the third hand. The fourth went to MacCoy, the fifth to Richey. On the sixth hand dad bluffed with a couple of sevens, MacCoy and Richey dropped out early, but Landy had bet $2000 before he drew back, and dad reaped the pot. At the end of an hour Landy had lost around $4000. Richey was about even, MacCoy was a little ahead.

"Landy allowed himself to look disturbed. He leaned forward, drumming on the table. 'We ain't getting nowhere.' "Dad nodded and they stared at each other in silence. Landy's eyes were hostile, but the look of complete understanding in them was more evident than ever. Landy leaned back. "Let's get it, then." "Dad couldn't mistake his meaning. Landy didn't look at either Richey or MacCoy. Dad, of course, had long since realized that they were as unrelated to the issue of the game as the wax figures Landy had confiscated two weeks before. "MacCoy cut and Landy laid down five cards to each. Dad had three queens, a ten, an ace. He had a feeling that the game was coming to a head. His eyes leaped to Landy's, then dropped to his cards again. Richey discarded three, dad the ace and the ten, MacCoy three.

"Standin' pat, eh? MacCoy whispered. "I reckon these'll do me," Landy's voice shook. "Dad drew the two cards towards him, wondering what was Landy's pat hand? The chances favored a full house. A flush likely, but not to be feared. A straight flush was mighty rare. "And then he slipped the index corner of his draw carefully into sight and his heart stopped for a second. The fourth queen was staring up at him! He had a hand that was within two of being unbeatable! With the ace broken, only four kings and a straight flush could top him. Standing pat wasn't an indication of fours and he wasn't likely Landy had that rare bird, a straight flush. No, dad argued, Landy's pat hand was either a lower hand or a bluff. And he'd like to see Landy bluff his four painted ladies!"

"Dad found a three and a six in his draw, but he felt fairly safe and when Richey dropped he should forward a stack of rods. MacCoy saw the bet and Landy flung his cards down in disgust, ex-

"That stuff I drank last night must have been paint remover." "Why?" "It took all the enamel off my teeth."

In a certain western town a beautiful chorus girl sold a rich banker for breach of promise and was awarded ten thousand dollars. Shortly after leaving the court she was hit by a street car and had eight ribs broken. The same judge awarded her eight dollars.

Moral: Never play with a woman's heart—klick her in the ribs.

The late Thomas Fortune Ryan always went half way to meet opportunity. He invariably kept between $25,000,000 and $40,000,000 cash on hand to pick up stray bargains.

An old-time gas maker died and went to heaven. The receiving angel asked if he would like anything in particular. "Yes," said the gas maker, "I always like chairs. Get me 10,000 sopranos, 10,000 altos, and 10,000 tenors."

"But," returned the angel, "don't you want some basses?" "No," said the gas maker, "I'll sing bass."

Boy, selling flowers on street: "Buy some flowers for your wife, mister?" "Cristy Bachelor: 'Haven't got a wife!'" "Then buy a bunch to celebrate with."

First Steno: "Doesn't your boss ever take you out to lunch?" Second Ditto: "No, the way that old gink treats me you'd think I was his wife."
