Through a telescope in this look-out station the skipper could be seen anxiously watching the progress of the launch as it rode the waves and his

BANKERS RETURN TO THEIR HOMES

La Grande Convention Best in Association's History, Many Declare.

With two enjoyable days of business and pleasure behind them, Oregon state bankers, who were here Monday and Tuesday for the 24th annual convention, began leaving for their homes yesterday afternoon and by this morning, practically all had started the trip to their work-day jobs.

Several of the visitors declared that beyond a doubt, the La Grande session was the best the Oregon association had ever had, and many of the western Oregonians carried home with them a realization that all of the scenery isn't in their half of the state.

Many were frankly amazed to find such a country as exists in the Grande Ronde valley and the Wallawa territory as they expected to find desert and sagebrush and scrubby brush and dust. Instead, they arrived in a country of green beauty, of rich soil and serene peace.

WASHINGTON, June 19 (AP)—Ambassador Dawes and Premier MacDonald have no cause to be disappointed in the reception of their addresses last night at London and Lassomans, asking reduction in armaments as an initial step toward world peace.

The attitude of the London press was wholly favorable. "It is evident from the ambassador's utterances," said the Times editorially, "how great an enterprise has been set before the nations and to what level of sincerity, sobriety, and far sightedness they must rise if they would bring it through. The world sanction for which Ambassador Dawes asks is ideally right and is in practice essential, but it is with the British and American people that hopes of progress primarily rest. Their failure to agree has halted and until it is amended will continue to halt disarmament."

The conservative Daily Telegraph said: "British opinion undoubtedly will approve his proposals as accessible to common sense, supported by experience. The nation will very willingly listen to Mr. MacDonald's appeal to share helpfully the labor of the govern-

"The did it, my wife did it," Markowski insisted.

Mrs. Markowski, hysterical much of the time, cried, "My husband did it."

The Virginian was the author of the $250,000 fine appropriated last session by congress for the purpose of an inquiry, under the direction of the president into prohibition.

This is the fund now being used by the Hoover law enforcement commission and Glass declared that "both the president and the president and the commission have gone as far as it is possible to go when they talk about reorganizing the judicial procedure."

Glass' utterances were made shortly after Senator Copeland, democrat, New York, had described recent fatal shootings by federal officers enforcing the prohibition law as "outrageous killings," and urged the senate to give serious consideration to finding a remedy.

Meanwhile, the president's law enforcement commission was in session in an office building in the business section of the city but its deliberations were behind closed doors and nothing was forthcoming as to what was going on.
