GOLD BULLETS

by Charles G. Booth

LYNDY'S bet was probably the transfer and his loss would be the Two brothers. But Dad stopped to look at the dumpy and that second impulse took him. Why not make it two of a kind? "If he'd thought about it first for, say, two solid minutes, he wouldn't have done it, for he hadn't one chance in ten of putting it over. He glanced through the door again. Fitch still hung over the gallery rail, smoking. Shutting the door, Dad peeled off his shirt and hustled into the storeroom. Sitting Bull looked the likeliest candidate and he tore off the jummy's headgear, drew his silk shirt over his head and shoulders, and set it down on the chair opposite Napoleon. Then he put his own hat on Sitting Bull's head, well over the eyes, pulled a chair so that the absence of legs wouldn't be easily noticed from the door, gave Napoleon's hat a rocky hit, and considered the effect. Just then, the door-latch clicked.

"Dad dropped behind Napoleon's chair, puffing out cigarette smoke. The door opened an inch or so and Fitch's face appeared in the crack. Dad had to press his hands to his naked body to quiet the pounding of his heart. The door opened wider. Fitch must be coming in. Dad's hand slid around to his 45. "What you want, he snarled, in a fair imitation of Lyndy's high-pitched voice. "Fitch stopped. 'Nothin', Joe, I was just takin' a look-see.' "Get out, then! Dad shouted in the same voice. "Fitch slammed the door shut. "Dad stood up, breathing hard. Of course, Fitch had no reason to believe the two figures he saw were not Dad's and Lyndy's, but he didn't think one man in a hundred could have carried it off. "It wasn't likely that Fitch would look in again for a while. Dad crammed the marked cards into a pocket and raised the cash of the north window to the top. Climbing through, he dropped to the roof of the beam-beneath it, then to the ground below. He listened. Nothing happened. He hadn't been seen, evidently. He remembered, then, that he'd forgotten to bring Lyndy's magnificent glasses. Well, he wasn't going back for them.

"Dad had intended to submit the cards and Lyndy's other pair of glasses to the miners, but with Lyndy dead and the miners full of his cheap whiskey, he doubted if this were wise. They'd be more than likely to lynch him and Uncle Jerry, and inquire into the merits of the case afterwards. He thought of the north window, No, he must do better than that. "He slid over to the door and opened it an inch or so. Fitch was loitering on the stair. Shutting the door, he hurried into the storeroom. Professor Deyden Pope's wax figures stood in two rows near the door. Dad grabbed Napoleon Bonaparte and, after pulling the table out of the immediate zone of the light above, plunked him down sideways on the chair Lyndy had occupied. Dad rolled Lyndy into the shadows behind the table, stripped him of his gray shirt, and drew it over Napoleon's head and shoulders. Then he covered Napoleon with Lyndy's hat, set Lyndy's glasses on his nose, and lowered the light.

"Someone knocked on the door. Dad dropped into the chair, faced Napoleon, and casually lit a cigarette. He let his hand slide along the gun belt, at the same time blowing a cloud of aggressive smoke between himself and Napoleon. "The door opened. Dad glanced over his shoulder. Fitch was looking in. Nodding casually to him, Dad exhaled more smoke into Napoleon's face. Sweat started out on his forehead and trickled down his cheeks, his hand continued to be gliding into his windpipe. "I want to talk with you about that evidence, Lyndy," he said calmly. "Fitch drew back and shut the door. Dad crept over to the door and peered out again. Fitch was leaning over the gallery rail. Downstairs, the hubbub was worse than ever.

Dad bent over Lyndy and went through his pockets, but he found neither the mining transfer nor the check, although he recovered the original stake he had lost to Lyndy on the final hand. The check and the transfer weren't in the safe, Lyndy's desk, or the pocket of Napoleon's shirt. "Dad didn't dare wait any longer. He'd stop payment of the check when he got out of the valley.

RELIEF FROM CURSE OF CONSTIPATION
A Battle Creek physician says: "Constipation is responsible for more misery than any other cause." The immediate relief has been found. A tablet called Resal Orford has been discovered. This tablet attracts water from the system into the lax, dry excremental bowel called the colon. This water loosens the dry food waste and causes a gentle, thorough, natural movement without forming a habit or ever increasing the dose. Stop suffering from constipation. Chase a Resal Orford at night. Next day bright. Got 24 for 25c today at the nearest Resal Drug store, Glass Drugs, Inc. —Adv.

LEAVENWORTH, Kas., June 20 (AP)—R. E. Winkler, 47, foreman of the laundry in the federal prison here, was killed today by a flat iron in the hands of a prisoner.

"Hobby, if you're a good boy this afternoon while I'm entertaining company I'll give you a nickel." "A nickel! Gee, what mother you are always looking for bargains."

"Percy—My grandmother only weighed two pounds when she was born." "Percy—Gosh! And did she live?"

When the preacher called for women to stand up and promise to go home and mother their husbands, only one little woman arose, and when he told her to go home at once and mother her husband she said: "Mother him? I thought you said another him!"

Half the barber-shop customers are women these days. Poor justice has overtaken those talkative barbers at last.

A REAL ACHIEVEMENT
A guy in New York recently played the saxophone for 20 hours without stopping. They're thinking of giving a medal to the fellow who checked up on it.

"Do you know the difference between the present and the past?" "No."

"Well the present usually makes up for the past."

THE SHORT END
"Comments of a lady trying to bring a telephone conversation to a close without actually saying 'For pity sakes, hang up!'" "Is that so? The Ideal, Yes, No. The Ideal! How funny. Well... No, I don't. No, I'm sorry. Is that so? You don't say. That's right. The Ideal! Well, good-b... What? No, I have a date. It was so nice of you. The Ideal! She did it. That's all. No, Well... Well... Thank, Well... Yes, I am. I'm sorry. Well... Yes, I will. Surely, Yes. Not at all. Well... Well... I certainly will. Yes, Good-b... Yes, Goodbye!"

"No man's lip has ever touched here—so she swears." "Well, you can hardly blame the girl now can you?"

Vacation time will soon be here and when we get over it we can rest.

AT THE THEATERS

Youth Has Its Fling in Alice White Picture
Youth has its fling in "Hot Stuff," a youthful, peppy and effervescent comedy of the films that comes to the Arcade theater Friday. This gay First National college story stars Alice White, youngest of the stars, and was directed by Mervyn LeRoy, youngest of the directors. Almost without exception, the cast is composed of youngsters. "Hot Stuff" was adapted from the college romances "Bitter" written by Robert S. Carr, the high school author. It provides an ideal role for Miss White, whose work in the youthful "Harold Teen" will long be remembered. William Bakewell plays opposite the star, and Louise Fazenda and Boris Karloff lead a big cast of capable players. "Hot Stuff" is said to be one of the finest stories as college life yet filmed.

"Road to Ruin" Opens Sunday At Colonial
Parents will find a good many things to ponder over in "The Road to Ruin," juvenile court picture, that comes to the Colonial theater starting Sunday, because the picture brings home with telling force a lot of facts which many people would like to know. "Bitter" it is said. And it is because of this fact that many of the leading authorities of the country have said "The Road to Ruin" should be played for parents, even though these parents have to be compelled to see it. Being a motion picture of an actual case taken from the court records of the city of Los Angeles and made under the direct supervision of the head of that department, the film cannot be laid open to the charge of being imaginary.
