GUILD BULLETINS

by Charles G. Booth

SYNOPSIS: Dillon—Ogden's slayer—is Luther MacNair! The murderer is dead, killed in the dramatic climax of a plot which he hoped would rid him of Peesbles, who alone had successfully unmasked the mysterious murderer of Andrew Ogden's death. Peesbles' little red notebook holds the center of the stage as he outlines, step by step, the links of the evidence which convicted Luther MacNair of a crime he tried to fasten on Jerry.

Chapter 48
NINE LINKS
I put away my little red notebook. "Those," I said, "are the nine links in my chain of evidence against MacNair. In bulk, the chain is impressive; unlinked it and you will find that most of the links are weak."
"I don't know about that," Deacon objected. "I thought you had a pretty strong case."
"I shook my head. "It might have got a conviction in an English court, but I doubt if it would have in an American."
"MacNair had been too clever to leave any tangible clew behind him. Moreover, he hadn't been sending men to the death penalty for 20 years without learning a thing or two about evidence, and he knew just as well as I did that I hadn't enough to be sure of convicting him."

"So that you may understand what happened tonight I shall try to give you a sort of moving picture of MacNair's mental processes from Sunday morning up to the end."
"MacNair knew I believed him to be Andrew's murderer and that his attempt to implicate Jerry wasn't apt to succeed; so he looked around for a likelier candidate. He fixed on the cunning, half-witted old desert rat, Furie. Furie's violent quarrel with Andrew had provided him with motive for the crime."
"But first he must plant Jerry's flannels in Terridity, as the trail inevitably would lead there. And this on Sunday morning MacNair proceeded to do. Not to further involve Jerry, remember, but to support the charge of murdering Andrew and getting away in Jerry's flannels that he purposed bringing against Furie."
"I, also, went to Terridity Sunday morning. Neither of us had expected the other to be there. MacNair now saw that while I might not have enough evidence would make him force the issue, commit that overt act which would complete my chain of evidence against him."

Furie, wild-eyed and excited, confirmed the story of Dillon's plot.

"You mean that you deliberately invited him to murder you?" Henry shouted.
"Something of the sort," I confessed.
Luce was staring at me with fascinated, horrified eyes. She seemed beyond speech. Jerry's mouth hung open. Hyde had forgotten his sardonic grin. Furie, whom Jerry's flank had brought to himself looked sadder than I had ever seen him.

"It was to be a duel of wits, you see, and I was pretty sure Skull Valley would be the field of honor. MacNair telephoned me this afternoon that he was going down to Skull Valley to arrest Furie for the murder of Andrew. Did I want to be in at the finish? If so, I was to come alone. I knew what he meant—and he knew that I did. Well, I came."
"I then recounted what had happened up to the moment when I had knocked Furie out."
"Says that 'it'?" Furie suddenly shrieked. "The white-bellied coyote told me you was a-goin' to break me neck for me. 'Tis a good thing ye bust me under the chin. Git on with it, will ye?"
"This was encouragement indeed, and I proceeded.

"You see, if MacNair had won, his story of the shooting would have been true. As I swept up my pistol I looked for MacNair to come pouring in. But he was still waiting. My eye fell on the door-sill and I thought of that psychological trick Andrew used 30 years ago."
"MacNair was familiar with Furie's astonishing habit and shirt. As you see, I put both on Napoleon, pretending that Furie was on the point of shooting me. Then I fired my pistol twice. MacNair rushed in, saw Furie's hat and fired at the dummy three times before he took upon me, bringing up his pistol to kill me. That was the overt act I had been waiting for."
"They were standing around me like mourners at a burying. I ran a quizzical eye from Nathan Hyde to Roy Hammond."
"It seems to me," I observed shrewdly, "that Hammond once prospected these parts as a young man."
"Is it possible that he was down here recently and discovered the new entrance to the 'Two Brothers'?" Is it possible that he went to Nathan Hyde and that between them they dug up the story of that incredible poker game?"
Hyde chuckled. "We haven't found the mine transfer yet. Have you?"
"No," and I laughed. "I suppose you were going to sell it to Andrew or Luce's heirs for a tidy sum."
"Well, Luce did a good job when he hid it. You can give Hyde his snuff-box, Henry."
Luce had dried her tears and now she managed to get in a word. "The most wonderful part of it is that my Uncle John should turn out to be Mr. Holmes instead of Dr. Watson," she exclaimed.
Henry burst forth, and I knew it was coming out at last. "Your Uncle John always played a lone hand. And he believes in keeping things to himself. When he retired ten years ago he was one of the best men Uncle Sam's Secret Service ever had. And he doesn't seem to have lost the old knack." (Copyright 1929, Wm. Morrow Co.)

The mystery of Andrew Ogden's murder is solved—but there still is an important point to be cleared up in Monday's—the final chapter.

Sometimes when people don't talk sense, what they need is change.

When a woman starts chasing a man, the race soon develops into a neck and neck event.

A man may be able to read his wife like a book, but he can't shut her up as easily.

"While I was out with some of the boys the other night, a burglar broke into our house."
"Did he get anything?"
"I'll say he did my wife thought it was me coming home."

Candy stammered. If he gives a half-pound box, he's stingy; two pounds, he's generous; five pounds, he's a show-off.

Piercing Zieffeld says the public isn't interested in his reviews and he's going to quit. The trouble is you can see his reviews free on the benches these days.

Buster Keaton Coming to Star In "Spite Marriage"

Burning a ship to get a laugh, and staging a wreck at sea, all for the sake of hilarity, are some of the lengths to which Buster Keaton goes to make audiences roar in his new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer starring vehicle, "Spite Marriage," which will be at the Star theater Sunday.

The new story is a hilarious comedy of backstage theatrical life, in which an actress marries Buster in order to spite a former lover. Both Buster and his bride are then plunged into a series of hilarious troubles and thrills. Edward Sedgwick, who directed "The Cameraman," directed the new picture, with Dorothy Sebastian as the actress heroine and a notable cast that includes Lella Hearn, Edward Earle, William Bachtel, John Byron and many others of note.

The story is an original by Lew Lipton, scenarized by Ernest S. Pagan.
