ARID NATION IS NOT POSSIBLE

So Says Andrew J. Volstead, Now Dry Adviser for U. S.

ST. PAUL, (AP)—Andrew J. Volstead, "father of the dry law," has decided that the time will never come when a person cannot get an intoxicating drink if he wants it.

Perfect prohibition is as impossible as perfect prevention of murder or robbery, he says.

Getting him to comment upon himself of the cause he espoused is a task resembling hell. He shows publicly, and for that reason the country that has come to regard the name as synonymous with prohibition, has lost trace of him.

Six days a week the tall, spare man of 70, gray-haired, wrinkled and seldom smiling, is at his desk in the northwest prohibition enforcement headquarters here. He is the legal adviser.

Volstead, as chairman of the judiciary committee of the lower house of congress, led in the drafting of the prohibition enforcement act in 1919. Later he was defeated for re-election.

Out of his experiences in the enforcement bureau, Volstead has reached some conclusions. There always will be liquor for those who want it, he believes, "home-brew" often is more poisonous than moonshine; the sale of malt and hops combination should be banned; the buyer is as morally guilty as the seller, and the sale of hotel serving "wet-up" is morally violating the law.

Volstead holds the prohibition has brought great prosperity to the average man; has reduced drunkenness and poverty; has made remote a temptation and raised the social standards of a nation. He thinks Great Britain eventually will try prohibition, and other European countries will follow.

He has no patience with the claim that prohibition is at attempt by law to regulate morals, and therefore illogical.

"Law does regulate morality," he observed, somewhat heatedly for such a taciturn individual. "Law has regulated morality since the Ten Commandments were given."

"Personal liberty has been taken away, cry the wets. Personal liberty also was taken away by the quarantine laws, and the right to steal was taken away by the law against larceny."

"The American public has to answer only the question as to whether prohibition is the best method of eliminating drunkenness, not whether the law is perfect."

"Granting some basis of truth to the claims of the wets, liquor and other blackening the character of our young people for a selfish interest, we contend that the young people of today and most of those drinkers who are not the class recruited from saloon days are occasional drinkers, and never will acquire the habit of drunkenness."

Volstead stopped abruptly. He had talked longer than he intended. He could have made a fortune writing books and for magazines, but preferred comparative obscurity. He once had a good offer to do nothing but sit on a platform so persons could look at the author of the Volstead act — at so much per look.

The mother who has difficulty in persuading her child to drink his required quart of milk a day may welcome the following recipes for chocolate drinks.

Chocolate Egg Flip
Omit the sugar and add 1/2 cup drops vanilla, 1-2 cups milk. This will make two glasses. Mix sugar cocoa and salt. Separate white and yolk of egg. Beat white until stiff. Beat in cocoa mixture. Beat yolk of egg and milk until well mixed. Add to white mixture and beat until thoroughly mixed. Add vanilla and serve.

Cream Chocolate
One-half cake baker's chocolate, 1-1/2 cups sugar, 2 cups water, 1-2 teaspoon salt, 3 quarts milk, 1-2 pint whipping cream, 2 teaspoons vanilla.

Grate chocolate. Mix with salt and sugar. Add enough boiling water to make a smooth paste and slowly stir into 2 cups boiling water. Boil, stirring to prevent sticking, until thick. Cool and add vanilla. When ready to serve, stir into cold milk. Top each glass with a spoonful of whipped cream slightly sweetened and flavored with vanilla.

It is not advisable to serve ice in milk drinks. The ice melts and makes the beverage watery and thin. Children should not be allowed to drink very cold milk anyway. Pleasantly cool but not chilling drinks are easier on small stomachs. If chilled beverages are served they should be taught to sip them slowly.
