"The Rainbow"
Coming to Star
On Sunday

George Bancroft
In "The Wolf
of Wall Street"

Deliberately to bring hundreds of people out into the "desert" on a false sense of gold, knowing they stand to lose everything they invest in the useless search—that seems incredible to La. listening to Darby Seaton's shouting over the success of his ruse.

As her guardian goes on raving about the poor stokers whom he has included into giving up their jobs and their homes—the "suck-eyes" who are filling his pockets with their hard won money while they search frantically for the golden wealth his have-faced he has promised them—Lola reluctantly admits to herself that the man she has looked to, her whole life, for protection is a thorough rascal.

And worst of all, Darby's scheme has caught, among all the other victims, the particular young man for whose success she is most anxious, because it will mean their happiness together.

"The Rainbow," at the Star Sunday, is a Reginald Barker Special Production for Tiffany-Stahl, and that means vivid, vital, throbbing drama. Dorothy Sebastian and Lawrence Gray play the leading roles with the support of Sam Hardy, Harvey Clark, Paul Hursi, Gino Corrado and King Zany. L. G. Rieby is the author of "The Rainbow" and one of its thrills is a desert sand storm.

It pays to advertise in the Observer.

George Bancroft—reader of "The Wolf of Wall Street" class in his latest Paramount picture, "The Wolf of Wall Street," an all talking picture which comes to the Arcade theatre Sunday. More than that, Bancroft wears a white collar and diamonds to boot, marking a contrast to the roles he has been accustomed to of late.

As may be construed from the title of the film, Bancroft portrays the role of an investment broker who dabbles in stocks and bonds. So engrossed is he with his work that he becomes entirely oblivious to his wife's social activities—who, before her husband became wealthy, was a circus performer. Bacchanova essays the role of the neglected wife.

Bancroft has a partner in his business, which part is portrayed by Paul Lukas. Lukas dislikes Bancroft because his partner boasts too much of his ability to make or break the stock market. For revenge he strikes up a flirtation with Bancroft's wife. How Bancroft works vengeance upon the two, in a manner more to be felt by them through their pocket-books, serves to make one of the most interesting stories ever filmed.

Aside from Lukas and Bacchanova, Bancroft has excellent help from Nancy Carroll and Arthur Rankin, who have important roles in the production. Rowland V. Lee directed the film.

A LETTER
You Will Find Interesting

Your policy of giving your students the incentive and opportunity to move forward as rapidly as their own ability and application will permit makes your school unique in my judgment. As a graduate of the University of Washington and the Ellensburg State Normal School, I am glad to state that your instructors are among the best I have ever known. I do not know where I could have gone for a more profitable course than I have had at the Northwestern School of Commerce.
