PILLS AND FRIPPETTES FOR DAYTIME PAJAMAS
PARIS (AP)—The difference between daytime and nighttime pajamas is about 12 inches width in the trousers, according to present style standards.

Daytime suits, in a majority of cases, have trousers that are almost as wide as skirts. Many of them are shirred from the waist. Others have fitted hips with the flare beginning above the knee.

Some of the more frivolous daytime pajamas have narrow pleated ruffles in "place of trouser cuffs. The same pleating appears again on the bottom of the jacket.

stayed until the aged mother remained in the chair. When her husband took up his story, however, she left the room and was not present to hear his detailed account of his friendship with Miss Hix.

Both the wife and mother testified that recently Dr. Snook had displayed a mental unrest that had been in contrast to the calm and placid disposition that had been his before.

Lumax Seyfert of defense counsel then took up the examination of Dr. Snook.

Dr. Snook related his early life and education. He talked in an even composed voice, and was as cool a witness as has been in the chair. There was not one trace of excitement as he answered clearly and distinctly the preliminary questions of his attorney.

Famous Pistol Shot
Seyfert took the questioning through Dr. Snook's study at Ohio state, his entrance into the veterinary faculty there, his war service in an aviation ground school and his trip to Europe in 1920 as a member of the American Olympic pistol team. Dr. Snook said he had held "six or eight" national pistol championships in slow and rapid fire and "four or five" in rifle shooting.

"When were you married?" Seyfert asked.
"In September, 1922."
"When was the first time you ever met Miss Theora Hix?" Seyfert asked.
"About three years ago. She came to the veterinary department as a stenographer."

He said he did not remember whether there was a formal introduction.
"The first time I held an extended conversation with Miss Hix was a few days after I met her. About that time I offered to drive her to her room at Maek Hall at the edge of the campus. It was raining as we were leaving our offices. There was another girl with her. Miss Hix got out at Maek Hall and the other girl left the machine at the Xell Avenue car stop. I am not sure whether she knew then that I was married."

Tells of Discussions
"I frequently had conversations with her at certain times of the day when I had to go to her office to have some stenographic work done. At first we talked about how she happened to come to the veterinary building to work. She said she did not have enough money for her school work and consequently was forced to accept employment part of the time."

"In general our conversation was discussion of her affairs. She spoke of being left alone then during the summer of 1924. Most of the students had gone away and she mentioned that her 'boy friend' had gone also. She did not speak much about her 'boy friend' at the time (late Dr. Snook learned that the friend was Marion T. Myers, who was employed in the horticultural department at the university.)

"During the first two weeks of our acquaintance we talked about companionate marriages. She said she thought companionate marriage was alright 'but when you lost your companion, it wasn't.'"
"This remark led us to discuss books of that nature."

with a fusillade of shots from a gun.

After raining the shelter of a small ravine, a quarter of a mile from the prison they released their prisoners. In the meantime an alarm had been sounded at the prison and deputy Warden Hudspeth and assistant day captain Arthur Graham organized the prison guards for pursuit.

Gun Battle Results
Hudspeth, Graham and several Lansing merchants armed with shotguns came upon the convict party on the Leavenworth, Victory Junction highway a mile north of Lansing and shot it out.

Warden M. P. Amrine, who was not at the prison when the break occurred, returned immediately and took charge. Feeling in the cell blocks was declared by the warden to be high against the men responsible for the trouble.

Knight today was said not to be in a serious condition and was expected to recover. Edwards, Schultz and Cheatham were confined in the punishment cell house. Normal activities of the prison were resumed. Prisoners detailed to the coal mine went underground on schedule.
