

WORLD WAR VET KILLS HIS NURSE

Brooding Over an Imaginary Wrong Leads to Frisco Tragedy.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 21 (AP)—Brooding over an imaginary wrong, a shell-shocked war veteran stabbed to death his benefactress yesterday as she talked with him in front of the local offices of the American Red Cross of which she was executive secretary.

Signs Confession The war veteran is David Lizarraga, 33. Last night he signed a confession admitting the killing. "I just lost my head. I hit her with this knife," he told police.

Threats Recalled Police learned that Lizarraga was obsessed with the idea that he was being robbed by the Red Cross which handled his government disability compensation.

Miss Ashmun had befriended the veteran, quieting him when he grew excited and excusing his outbursts to the others, even when he threatened her workers in the Red Cross disclosed. It was because of her kindness, police believe that Lizarraga singled her out for his complaints and finally as the object of his attack.

Retail Prices Of Food Higher Survey Reveals

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21 (AP)—Retail food prices were shown by the labor department Tuesday to have increased two and one-half per cent from June 15 to July 15. Using 1913 as the index number of 100, the July figure was 158.5 compared with 154.8 in June and 152.8 in July, 1928. Increases were noted on potatoes, eggs, steaks, roasts and oranges.

A Welsh rarebit for four will taste better than one for 400

The big rarebit would certainly be tough and stringy. And coffee roasted in bulk cannot have the matchless, uniform flavor of Hills Bros. Coffee which is roasted a few pounds at a time. This patented, continuous process controls the flavor.

Pantages And His Accuser

Conservation Policy Insures Seal Skin Coats For Many Years to Come

BY OSCAR LEIDING Associated Press Feature Writer WASHINGTON (AP)—Seal skin coats, long a symbol of real-time luxury, are guaranteed a continuous lead in the fashion parade, thanks to Uncle Sam's strict policy of conservation.

Under the guidance of the bureau of fisheries, the seal herd on the Pribilof Islands, once near destruction because of indiscriminate slaughtering, has grown until it comprises nearly 50 per cent of all existing fur seal.

With the completion of the regular sealing season in July, W. T. Brewer, chief of Alaskan investigations, reports that 29,253 skins have been taken. Between 700 and 1,000 skins will be taken in the fall to increase the total more than 6,000 beyond the take in 1928.

"It is necessary to go back 40 years," he said, "to find a year in which there were so many skins taken at the Pribilofs as in the current season. In the intervening period the take has been so small that in 1913, it amounted to a mere 2,400 skins."

The seal industry is strictly a government venture, based on international agreement with Japan, Russia, and Great Britain to stem the wholesale destruction of the once plentiful animals.

When Alaska was purchased from Russia in 1867, the herd is estimated to have numbered several million animals. Pelagic sealing, the taking of seals at sea, was particularly destructive because no discrimination was made in the slaughter and the herd faced extinction.

In 1911, the four nations outlawed pelagic sealing and the United States was charged with building up the herd. No killing of seals is allowed, except by government agents and native Indians who depend upon the animals for sustenance.

Seals are killed for their skins by government employees, who select primarily three-year-old bachelors but guard the future of the herd by sparing females, young pups, and old males.

The taking of skins, even by the Indians, is rigidly supervised. The enterprise is governmental from the very beginning until the pelts have been tanned, dyed, and made ready for market. Then they are auctioned off, and the proceeds turned over to the United States treasury.

Fifteen per cent of the money goes to Canada and a like amount to Japan for the relinquishment of pelagic sealing rights.

The Pribilof Islands, located in the Bering sea, are the breeding grounds and mark the only spot to which the Alaska herd comes to shore.

SWELLS FROM VESSEL SPOIL PLANE TESTS

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Aug. 21 (AP)—Swells from a boat in Chesapeake bay spoiled an attempt today by Lieutenant Alford J. Williams to set his mercury motor into the air for a flying test that would demonstrate the plane's fitness to compete in the Schneider cup races.

Because of the swell officers on the plane's tender said, Williams had to cut off his motor after he had taxied about two miles.

River and bay craft also forced Williams to shut off the 25 cylinder motor of the Mercury on his second attempt of the day. As he sped down the river into Chesapeake bay picking up a speed of more than 100 miles an hour to take the plane into the air, an incoming ferry from across the bay and several pleasure craft blocked his path and forced him to stop. A small naval academy tender was sent after the plane to tow it back to the mother ship.
