WATCH AND PRAY—Watch therefore; for we know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.—Matthew 25:13.

Married men are said to work harder; single ones say they have too.

Gradually scientists invent new and better ways to do everything except say "Please Remit."

Too many people's idea of a good time is too many people's idea of a wicked time.

To the visitor who views the Round-Up at Pendleton for the first time there is a thrill that can hardly be equaled anywhere else in the world. And to the long-time resident of Eastern Oregon who has seen this pageant of the old West grow from its small beginning of two decades ago to the present huge spectacle, each year's show is always new. No single event in Oregon attracts so many people to the state from a distance. None advertises the history, the romance, the beauty of the Northwest more effectively.

CHILDREN IN THE STREET

Each day's news is filled with automobile accidents in this motoring age. There are all variety of cases. Cars go off the road, crash into other, hit trains, collide with pedestrians, run over children. There are serious injuries, fatalities, loss of property. Sometimes the cause can be attributed to recklessness, sometimes to road and vehicle faults, sometimes to careless pedestrians and playing children.

No accident seems quite so serious, is quite so heart-breaking as the one when a child is hit by a car. If there is any one thing that all drivers guard against all the time it is the child who plays in the street or who darts thoughtlessly into the path of an automobile without looking. And if there is any one thing that thoughtful, conscientious parents try to teach their children in the art of self-preservation, it is to cross streets carefully and not to play in the streets.

As obviously important as this is in child training, hundreds of parents in this community fail to put enough emphasis on it to protect their children from serious accidents. Drive about the streets of any town and watch the children at play. Watch them cross the street, run into the street after playthings. Watch them on they way home from school. Some of the more plainly trained to look out for automobiles, schooled against taking chances in the street. And fully half of them show no evidence whatever of any training of this kind. They seem to have been taught that motor car drivers are to be held completely responsible, regardless of other conditions.

Sometimes children figure in accidents that they could not possibly have avoided. Far more frequently the daring, reckless action of the child makes it impossible for a driver to avoid an accident. And broken bones, serious internal injuries, permanent disability and sometimes death result because parents fail to train their children from babyhood against this modern danger of the streets.

Parents who take it for granted that their children can take care of themselves without constant training and vigilance should watch their children at play, going on errands, going to school. Some of them will find that their youngsters are not only careless but take deliberate chances when in the street. You have seen them stand in front of an on-coming car and jump aside only in the last instant. You have seen them stand as close to a passing car as possible. You have seen one child push another into the path of a car—and treat it all as a huge joke.

There's something the matter with parents of children who do such things. They are lacking in parental responsibility, in parental love—in something. Certainly they are far from practicing the Golden Rule either with their children or with their neighbors in the community.

It's a comparatively easy matter to teach children to exercise normal caution in crossing streets—and that's the only time they have any business being in the streets. Stand at a crossing near any of our schools and you'll see dozens of well trained children look both ways before starting across. And with them you'll see the thoughtless children of careless parents who trout out the death-dealing alibi, "I want my kids to learn to look out for themselves." And these same parents never give a thought to the fact that children can learn only from their own experience or the experience of others—that a broken leg or a crushed skull is a terrible price to pay for the knowledge that streets should be crossed with caution.

A Turban in the Mode

Amazingly new in the Marcelle Lily turban that lifts its black felt self off Millay's forehead and fits very snugly, in the season's eye-revealing manner. A new version of the popular tri-color scheme is exemplified by the use of black, red and white velvet ribbon, plaided in a striking Tartan design. This velvet makes a smart sailor's knot low on the left side, with the ends flaring out in the Asherman's hat silhouette.

Tender young chickens are disjointed and simmered gently until tender. One cup of chicken stock is combined with 1 cup cream and the liquid is thickened with 1 tablespoon flour rubbed to a smooth paste with 1 tablespoon butter. This is brought to the boiling point and poured over the chicken arranged in a border of steamed rice.

MENUS

By Sister Mary

Nowadays the American menu reveals an inclination to drift away from the old-fashioned heavy meals with their hearty meats and rich desserts. Our menus are made with attention to a balanced diet and our choice of foods is not limited to season.

Our home cooks with their countries have taught us many new dishes. The excellent commercially prepared products have lightened the preparation of meals. The increasing knowledge of women regarding the value of various foods plays an important part in the selection of the daily bill of fare.

The following dinner menus are unusual, seasonable and perfectly balanced:

Menu No. 1

Roasted calf's liver, stuffed baked tomatoes, Parker house rolls, jellied cabbage salad, peach upside-down cake, coffee.

The tomatoes are stuffed with a mixture of cooked macaroni, tomato pulp and cheese. The combination provides a pleasing contrast with the rather highly seasoned liver.

A prepared lemon or pineapple jelly can be used with the cabbage for the salad. Threads of green and red sweet peppers add color through the mold.

Fresh or canned peaches are used for the dessert.

Menu No. 2

Stewed chicken in rice border.
