

Local News In Brief

State Bar Association—Senator Colon Eberhard has returned from the annual meeting of the State Bar association in Medford, which was held last weekend. The sessions were in the federal building, the formal sessions continuing during Friday and part of Saturday. A trip to Crater Lake over the newly completed road featured Saturday's gathering with about 200 visitors enjoying the outing. At the dinner dance Friday evening and the formal banquet Saturday evening about 400 lawyers and women were present. All members of the supreme court attended, including Judge George M. Brown, who has recently recovered from an extended illness. Nearly all the circuit judges were present. The principal subject the lawyers discussed concerned the efficiency of the jury system from the standpoint of economy and substantial jurisdiction and proposed reforms in procedure in the courts. A committee was appointed to investigate and report what changes may be made in procedure. The next annual meeting will receive the committee report and the association cannot act before the legislative convenes in 1930. Roy Halsey, of Pendleton, was elected vice president of the association and it is understood that he extended an invitation to behalf of the lawyers of Umatilla county lawyers to the executive committee to meet in Pendleton in the fall of 1930.

POLE ADVOCATES BRANCH BANKING

ness activity of the last eight years, he said had prevented such a situation but also indicated through inability of the small banks to share the general prosperity, that there was a fundamental weakness in the banking laws.

The controller said he had given long and careful thought to the question of branch banking by members of the national bank system, now allowed to establish branches only in the city in which they are located and in foreign countries.

His Conclusion

"I have reached the conclusion that an extension of branch banking privileges should be granted to national banks," he said. "That it should not be nation wide will be generally admitted. It has been suggested that branch banking be limited to the confines of each federal reserve district. This may not be feasible to the same extent in all federal reserve districts. Restricting it to state boundaries, which are political rather than economic, presents difficulties, as does the suggestion that a radius of 50 or 100 miles from the parent bank be fixed, but there is an economic area to which the extension of branch banking can be applied, varying in size to meet the diversified conditions that exist in this vast country.

"It is for congress ultimately to fix the boundaries of these districts; but congress, of course, would not and could not attempt to do so prior to careful consideration and study of all of the factors, which could only be carried on by a committee of qualified experts. "Would we not be making real progress if, at the coming session, the congress were to instruct, let us say, the secretary of the treasury, the governor of the federal reserve board and the comptroller of the currency to study the banking situation and to report the boundaries which they would recommend that the congress set up, establishing such definite areas?"

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 2 (AP)—Election of John G. Lonsdale of St. Louis to be president of the American Bankers association for the next year and an address on "the need of a new banking policy" by the comptroller of the federal currency, John W. Cole of Washington, D. C., were two outstanding pieces of business of today's general session of the 55th annual convention of the association.

MENUS

No matter how choice the foodstuffs used, inadequate seasoning leaves the cooked dish flat and uninteresting. Tastes differ widely, but the essential point to keep in mind when cooking is to use seasoning that will bring out the flavor of the material used.

Salt is an art. The soup that was salted with "too heavy a hand" or the gravy that was seasoned too lightly proves flat. Although salt is the most important of all seasonings, the others are legion and an intelligent use of them will make plain, everyday dishes taste as savory.

Sugar helps out the flavor of all vegetables unless they are fresh from the garden. A bit of sugar rubbed into the meat adds much to its richness and flavor.

"Time" for bland fruits

Lemon juice and orange juice are invaluable as a means to accentuate the flavor of bland fruits and provide a pleasing contrast with vegetables, meats and fish. Beets and carrots gain much if orange juice is included in the seasoning. Lemon is proverbial with fish and oysters. Sections of orange served with lamb chops or broiled sweetbreads enhance the flavor of these delicious foods.

Vanilla is another flavor that means much in the art of cooking. Always buy the best. But too much vanilla conceals the flavor of the material being seasoned. A few drops of this subtle flavoring added with a little sugar to whipped cream, produce a perfect blend of delicate flavors, but too much sugar or vanilla overpowers the flavor of the cream itself.

And the "seasoning" of onion. Any vegetable or meat salad falls flat if this seasoning is completely ignored. A drop of onion juice added to the salad dressing does not give a definite onion flavor but does produce an intriguing business in the whole salad.

Although it's far better to err on the side of under-seasoning rather than over-seasoning, a dish that must be seasoned entirely after cooking is never so effective as one seasoned during the cooking.

Some Spicy Hints

The strength of spices and salts varies. Those which have been exposed to the air lose some of their savorness. Various foodstuffs absorb more or less salt or sugar. Accurate measurements cannot be given, but the following general rules are worth keeping in mind:

One-half to one teaspoon salt is calculated for one pound of meat.

One teaspoon salt is added to one quart of water when vegetables are half cooked. The vegetable aids in determining the amount of salt, since delicately flavored vegetables require less than strong flavored ones. The amount of butter and its saltiness influences the amount of salt used for any seasoning, be it cake or vegetable.

One-eighth to one-fourth teaspoon pepper is commonly used in seasoning the average meat or vegetable dish unless the dish is wanted "hot."
