MENUS

By Sister Mary
The woman whose family takes luncheon away from home has an extra responsibility in planning the two meals that are eaten at home. These two meals must be arranged to make up for any deficiencies in the noon menu. Whenever it is at all possible to introduce a vegetable into the breakfast menu, it will be found well worth while. Cool crisp celery, curly endive, sliced tomatoes and watercress in season will be enjoyed for breakfast.

In the following breakfast menu, the parsley cubes sauteed with breakfast bacon are savory and unusual.

How to Choose Mutton
When choosing a leg of mutton, be sure that the fat is hard, white and flaky. This is an indication of good meat. Remove the pinkish skin and trim off any superfluous fat before cooking. This will overcome that stinky "mutton" flavor disliked by so many persons. Mutton is one of the best and most economical of the meats, and careful preparation will do much to make it popular.

Breakfast—Turkey grapes, scallion cream, parsley cubes sauteed with breakfast bacon, crisp oven toast, milk, coffee.

Luncheon—English monkey, caper sauce, potatoes, in parsley butter, mashed turnips, head lettuce with Russian dressing, canned cherries, plain cake, milk, coffee.

Pickled nasturtium seeds make a surprisingly good substitute for capers.

Caper Sauce
One cup mutton stock, 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons flour, 1-3 cup capers.
Drain capers from vinegar. Melt butter, stir in flour and, when bubbling slowly, add stock, stirring constantly. Bring to the boiling point and add capers. Heat one minute and serve.

Nasturtium seeds are gathered green for pickling. They are soaked in a strong brine for two days, then drained and put in jars. A sweet, unspiced vinegar is poured boiling hot over the seeds and the jars are sealed ready to use when wanted. Use one cup sugar to one of vinegar for the "pickling syrup."

Many boys are taking up the study of housekeeping science, says a statistical Bulletin. Some body has to pen the cans.
