A note left by King before he disappeared led police to believe he intended to kill the entire family and then commit suicide, but police believe him still alive. Below, left to right, are Charles Jr., 5; Keith, 5; Paul, 10; Robert, 14, and Leon, 12, all of whom were killed along with Mrs. King with the exception of Charles Jr.

THE GARDEN

CROWN IMPERIALS AS ACCENTS

The largest and most imposing of the spring blooming bulbs is the crown imperial, botanically Fritillaria imperialis. It is so called because the stout stem that shoots up with surprising speed to a height of two feet or more bears a crown of large, deep green leaves with a row of large bell-shaped red to yellow flowers depending from it. It is a picturesque and stately plant valuable as an accent in the early spring garden.

The bulb is a curious one, large but with a hole in the center, which leads to the belief by those unfamiliar with it that it is defective but such is not the case. The bulb, when crushed or bruised, has a strong, unpleasant odor. Although the bulb is large, the usual rule for depth should not be followed. If planted too deeply the crown imperial will not bloom and will gradually dwindle and die. Two inches above the crown is the right depth. It likes a good rich soil.

The prevailing color is a brick red. There is an unpleasant odor to the bloom at close hand but the stately and unusual beauty more than atones for this odor. There are some lighter tones approaching yellow but the red ones are the showier.

Another frilliness of most unusual character and beauty is the checkered lily or guinea hen flower, of slender, grassy growth and producing a large six-cornered bell in shades of purple and checkered with white or cream in regular pattern and there is also a pure white variety. A group of these bulbs is always interesting. This bulb is also curious, consisting of two halves united by a small link at the base. They are excellent for shady locations and once planted will thrive for years.

There are some interesting frillinesses native to California which are making their way into gardens, all unusual plants of strange coloring and well worth a trial. The guinea hen flowers have small bulbs which should be planted two inches deep. They should be planted as soon as received as they are likely to shrivel and lose vigor if left too long out of the ground.

The big, blunt nose of the crown imperial is one of the first signs of spring in the garden, blooming with the early tulips. Try some frillinesses for something novel and interesting.

Village Denies Threats

District Attorney Pitts said he had previous knowledge of the statements of the women jurors, and that Village had denied that he had made threats as outlined in the affidavits.

"It seems rather strange to me," Pitts said, "that since the verdict was returned three jurors have had a sudden change of heart. The jury returned its verdict in open court, each member was polled and all stated that this was their verdict. It is the law of California that a jury cannot impeach its verdict."

Dr. Shuler subsequently was adjudged in contempt of court and fined $25 for the alleged statement.
