

Let's Not Forget Them On Armistice Day

Eleven years ago they paraded home amidst wild cheers and unbounded enthusiasm. Heroes—every one of them! How glad we were to have them back again. Let's remember them again today. They are the same heroes. They would offer to give the utmost for us again. They made peace possible and our great prosperity. Let's not forget!

men, including Corporal Alvin C. York, and advancing steadily through the dense woods and across the hill via an old trench. Suddenly, they find they are behind the German lines.

A moment later they run smack into 25 or 30 Germans, including a major and several other officers, grouped beside a little stream. Despite his hazardous position and the disparity in numbers, Sergeant Early decides to attack and the Americans open fire. Some who are returned but most of the Germans, believing they are surrounded by a large force, yell "Kamerad!" and surrender with upraised hands. The Americans surround them at the point of bayonets.

Early, Merrithew and Muzzel shot down. Suddenly, the German machine-guns on the hill realize what has happened, reverse their guns and open fire. Hell breaks loose, Germans and Americans alike drop flat on their bellies. In the first blast of fire, six Americans are killed outright, literally shot to pieces.

Sergeant Early gets a bullet through his body and two other wounded, three bullets hit through Corporal Otto B. Merrithew's arm; Private Mario Muzzel gets it in the shoulder.

With six of the detachment killed and three others wounded, including both of the other non-commissioned officers, Corporal York takes command. With him are seven men: Private George W. Williams, Michael A. Scina, Patrick Donahue, Thomas G. Johnson, Leo J. Sok, Joe Konoski and Percy Beardsley.

The seven privates are busy guarding the 30 prisoners, all huddled on the ground for protection, and are shielded by them from the German fire. That is all that saves them.

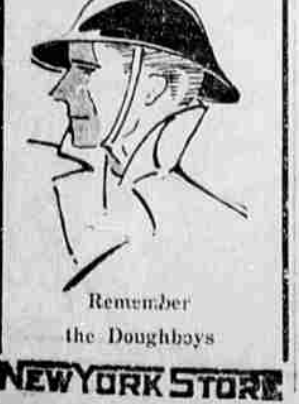

Lying on his belly with his head and wounded companions scattered around him, Corporal York begins picking off the German machine-guns on the hillside with his rifle. Countless streams of machine-gun bullets miss him, as if by miracle. In a momentary lull, he yells to them to come down and surrender. The answer is a long charge by eight Germans, York, shouting as straight and as cool as he shot squirrels in his native Tennessee mountains, shoots them down one by one in quick succession as they lunge for him. York's 28 bullets kill 28 Germans and 24 Germans are dead.

"Don't shoot any more, I'll order them to surrender and throw down their arms," says the German major. Surrender they do and so Corporal York and his little band march back to the American lines with 132 captives, Private Beardsley, Konoski, Sok, Williams and Scina ready, bringing up the rear is the badly wounded Corporal Merrithew, leaning heavily on Private Thomas.

Eleven years has brought a lot of changes for those men who went through hell with Sergeant York that day. York,

Oh-h-h! Watta Headache!

Private Scina, born in Italy and reared in New York, was working at a wire spring factory there when he was drafted in 1917. He told a reporter the other day that since his return from the army he has had very bad luck, being out of a job quite often. He is a very small man. Recently he applied for a job as a subway guard and was turned down because he was too short; the employment agent didn't think him big enough to handle the rash hour crowds. Just now he has the coat and hat checking concession in a New York barber shop.

Private Donahue is a mill worker in Lawrence, Mass., but has had the misfortune to be out of a job recently. He is unmarried.

Private Willis, already mentioned, drives his feed wagon in South Philadelphia every day and not even his customers know that he is a war hero. He's had a lot of hard luck, too.

Parson's Accessory Store is Success. Sergeant Parsons, who ordered Acting Sergeant Early to take the two squads and put the German machine guns out of action and who is pretty much of a war hero, himself, is making a success of his auto accessory store in Brooklyn. He was the first to see York and his little band come trooping back to the American lines with their 132 prisoners, and could hardly believe his eyes.

And what about the other members of the York party, the six who "went west," as the doughboys used to say? They were Corporal Murray Savage, Private Marjory E. Dymond, Ralph E. Weber, Fred Wareing, William Wine and Carl Swanson.

The bill that was stained with their blood became their monument. They buried them where they fell.

Children aren't the only ones frightened now by war stories—since the recent Wall Street show.
