What Will Your Light Bills Be 20 Years From Now?

Universal use of electricity did not come because of Edison's incandescent light. The light and its rapid development in only fifty years came because there was a universal demand for an improvement over the flickering candle and the uncertain kerosene lamp.

Electrical development today is answering an ever-advancing public demand for better light, more efficient power, greater service at decreased cost. What will be your light and power demands ten, twenty, fifty years from now?

Anticipating the answer to that question is the job of the electrical industry. To meet your demands of the future as well as the present—to serve you better and with greater economy—that is our constant goal.

The next half century will bring changes just as revolutionary as has the past. We are working persistently to keep abreast of those changes in your interest.
