Scientist Sees Asia as Holding Secret of American Prehistory

By Oscar Leiding
Science Editor
(Associated Press Feature Service)
WASHINGTON (AP)—The key to American prehistory lies not in Alaska but in Asia, in the belief of Dr. Alex Hrdlicka, Smithsonian anthropologist.

His contention supports a previous view that Mongoloid migration across Bering strait was so easy it was inevitable, contrasting with a prevailing opinion that the Eskimo had a purely American origin.

Scant hope of uncovering even faint records of the far past in central Alaska is seen by the noted scientist, who traversed the Yukon river from source to mouth during the summer in search of archaic lore.

"Unless some most fortunate accident occurs," he said, "we shall never be able to find real ancient so far along the Yukon, and similar in type to some in northeastern Asia.

"Our material," Dr. Hrdlicka said "is rich, but only careful study will show how important. The main achievement was to save for science much that would soon have been lost for all time."

"Smithsonian expeditions, while saving precious material and data from the American side of Bering sea, make more urgent an extension of the work in northeastern Asia. It is there, if it is felt even more strongly, that the material and information he that will clinch indications obtained on the American side."

More than 3000 miles were traveled on the great river, famous from the days of the gold rush. The scientist, assisted by Dr. J. Maly, of the University of Prague, crisscrossed from bank to bank in search of ancient sites, more than 1000 miles being covered in an open 18-foot canoe.

A large majority of the surviving full-blood Indians and Eskimos, melting before civilization even as the relics of their ancestors are being destroyed by nature, were measured, observed and photographed.

"Essential records on this vanishing population," Dr. Hrdlicka said, "thus are safe."

OIL MAN SAYS ETHICS MOST GUIDE MARKETING

NEW YORK (AP)—President E. B. Rosser of the American Petroleum institute, when he announced the institute's new code of marketing rules, said "the guiding principle of every marketing operation is an ethical one."

He said that one cause of overproduction in the oil industry was too "individualistic" competition.

"I believe," he said, "that most of our marketing evils may be traced directly, first, to permitting our manufacturing operations to dominate our position and, secondly, having overproduced our product, to permitting unskilled the use of double-barreled, double-distilled, super-salesmanship methods to try to get rid of the surplus product."
