Sidelights Of Grid "Classic"

Nick Hughes shivered from the cold as he wondered why it was so dark all of a sudden, when he discovered that "Toot" Garly and Ralph Winters were standing in front of the sun, yesterday at the alumni-high school football game.

Everyone wanted to see if Cooper was as good a football player as he is a speed cop and they were disappointed when he didn't play. Everything new and old in football togetery was on the field during the game, including Rocco's bright Irish sweater (bet the coach wears it St. Patrick's day). Fama was hard to tackle, it seems, because his bright purple and striped socks dimmed the eyes of his tacklers.

The "alums" had the ball. After the huddle they went to their places. Garly had just come in and everyone expected something to happen. He began to call signals (something like) seven-eight-four-six, and then he faltered. Was this something new? No one moved. "Ah, come on back," he yelled. After the second huddle everything was O. K. and the "alums" moved forward.

The cutest things in white caps were Bill Hughan and Ted Kline as water boys, first aid men and yell leaders. One can imagine the yelling in the good old days, from the support the "alums" gave their team yesterday.

About the last 10 minutes all the men were worrying for fear the Mrs. had let the turkey burn and everybody else was feeling the emptiness of hunger, but they enjoyed the game.

Dr. Hale of the Carnegie Institution hopes that the complex problem of the curvature of space will be settled by celestial measurements through the new 200-inch reflecting telescope of the California Institute of Technology. That has something to do with bald-headedness, hasn't it, professor?

A painting won a prize the other day and it was not discovered until after the award that it had been hanging upside down. The judges were turned around, too.

HEALTH

THE CHRISTMAS SEAL
By Dr. Frederick Stricker
Sufficient funds directed toward the prevention of disease in any country will bring returns in increased industrial efficiency, domestic harmony and community progress through freedom from epidemics, and ability to meet everyday demands of endurance and energy. The returns will be directly in proportion to the care used in the selection of the results to be obtained and the amount of money invested. This claim is based upon the combined experience of scientifically administered programs that have been placed under the microscope of scientific analysis. One of the agencies serving as the salesman of community and personal health is the National Tuberculosis association and its 1500 affiliated state and county associations. The price it asks for the commodity it has to sell—health, is your conscientious guarding of your personal health, the health of your family and of your community. Its legal tender is the Christmas seal. The annual sale of the tuberculosis Christmas seal is the sole source of revenue of the Oregon Tuberculosis association and of its twenty affiliated county public health associations. The indirect benefits which have resulted from the campaign against tuberculosis are among the most interesting things in the history of the disease. Because it was so dreaded and claimed so many young persons it was possible to interest the community in taking measures against it which have had a marked effect in preventing other diseases. Thus the campaign to have milk pasteurized not only caused a reduction in the number of children who developed tuberculosis but caused a tremendous reduction in the number of infants who died from other causes. Measures taken in schools and other public places to prevent infection with tuberculosis through the use of the common drinking cup, etc., have greatly reduced the incidence of other communicable diseases.

Public health nurses originally employed to instruct and care for tuberculosis patients in their own homes have proved so valuable in safeguarding the public health in other ways as well that few communities which have once employed one are willing to be long without this service. Medical examinations of school children and taken in some instances to discover cases of tuberculosis have discovered so many other things which were hindering the healthful development of children that they are coming more constantly into use. And so the fight against tuberculosis has come to be more and more closely tied up with measures for promoting the public health. Activities begun for the special purpose of reducing deaths from tuberculosis have proved their value in improving the public health and improving the public health has been found to lower the tuberculosis death rate.

action on it early in the next year if not before that time. Smoot said he would demand a resumption of the long daily sessions, beginning at 10 a. m. and running until 6 p. m. He was not prepared to state whether night sessions will be asked.

Movies Lead Books Among Children

CHICAGO, Nov. 29 (AP)—Alice Miller Mitchell, acting for the Well-to-do Foundation, set out to determine whether books or the movies held the greater appeal as entertainment for children and the result of her study was revealed a marked leaning toward the movies. She said 90.6 per cent of the 10,052 children studied attended the movies. Only 1.17 per cent habitually stated they did not go to picture shows, most of them remaining away because of religious beliefs.

"OREGON TRAIL BOY" DIES

SALEM, Ore., Nov. 29 (AP)—Newton "Uncle Now" Crabtree, pioneer resident of Crabtree Creek and Seio, died here Thursday morning after an illness of nearly two years. He suffered a second stroke a few days ago which was the immediate cause of death. Newton Crabtree was born on the Old Oregon trail skirting the Columbia river near the present site of The Dalles in 1845.

Pendleton High Downs Chieftains

PENDELTON, Ore., Nov. 29 (AP)—The Pendleton high school defeated Enterprise here yesterday 34 to 6 in the final game for the Buckaroo school.

Local people who witnessed the game at Pendleton were disappointed in the showing of both teams. It is reported, with neither showing the type of ball of which they are capable, La Grande people described the game as raged with little consistent teamwork. Before the game, a close contest had been expected.

through unfair competition brought against national association of advertising agencies and newspaper publishers in the maintenance of a fixed commission for agencies handling advertising accounts. Eugene W. Burr, attorney handling the prosecution for the commission, argued that the American Association of Advertising Agencies, the American Newspaper Publishers association, the American Press association and the Six Point league of New York were seeking to compel advertisers to place their national advertising business through agencies approved by the American association.
