

Harry Lauder Of America Working On O.-W. Railroad

Little do people realize when a certain "Smile" strides down the aisle in the train cars, solemnly selecting his hatbox, that he has one of those heather voices from Scotland, and that should he stop and sing for them, they would wonder why "he didn't go on the stage."

And then he could laugh, and how Jack Coleman would enjoy such a remark, for he has been on the stage, and since over the radio, and taught in Eugene, and sailed on the ocean, and even on many things, but best of all he is a native born Scotchman and enjoys Scotch jokes.

Sing at the Front

His rolling 'r's and booming 'b's have helped more than one tired and lonely soldier forget that home was far away, and that he was in a place filled with cruelty and sorrow and death. Many times on the train, this Scotchman sang for his fellow passengers. Even in the horrors of the dugouts, he sang and played the fiddle.

After the war he traveled with a troupe of his own, and through France, taking the part of a Scotch soldier in the production. Once at theater of Eugene, General Pershing was in the audience.

He came to America in 1907, after a year in Canada. About eight or nine years ago he and Edna Crossland, of Union, were married and are living in Pendleton. Once in a while on a party or when performing, Jack does his fiddle and plays guitar. The radio stations KOW and KOMA both broadcast his amusing songs. Sometimes the songs are of his own composition, both words and music, and often he sings Sir Harry Lauder's activities, for they are fellow countrymen.

Following is a paragraph from "Let 'er Buck," by Charles Wellington Foxworth, which gives an interesting account of his life:

"What! You don't know Jack—that well-knit, good-looking fiddle with a brogue as refreshing as the scotch of health?" In his early days as a lad he had sailed in an sailing vessel, being the Highland coxswain, but rather and from British Scotland to the West in 1904 to get into the steel business as a stowaway, but as he put it, only found bronchitis and saw-burn. He eventually found his way to the United States and his original compositions and identifiable impersonations he learned the Harry Lauder of America, there being no nothing in charge of a big exhibition crew, and now he's railroading it—happy-go-lucky, good-natured Jack, the well-oiled and a jolly favorite with all in the minds of many. Jack's rich Scotch baritone should have made its impress on many a gold field reveled along with McCormack and others."
