Health Talks

COLDS By far the most common of human ailments is the common cold. And because it is so widespread it would seem that we ought to know a certain amount about it. As to its cause there are many opinions, few of which are backed by convincing scientific proof.

There is no single cause. In fact, a cold is not a disease in the restricted sense of the word. Rather, what we commonly call a cold is a group of symptoms, associated with a number of diseases.

Sneezing, coughing, watering eyes and a running nose are the body's response to an irritant. But the irritant may be pepper, or dust, or your first cigarette, or, again, some dangerous germ fighting to invade your body.

When the causes are so varied and numerous the prevention ought to be difficult, and yet it isn't, really—particularly if by prevention we understand not only avoiding colds

(which is less easy), but keeping developing colds from becoming serious. The rules for prevention of colds are simple. They are: Avoid those who have a cold, particularly if they are carelessly and cough, sneeze and expectorate without regard for others; avoid excess fatigue, overwork and physical exhaustion; do not allow yourself to become chilled; keep yourself to the weather; and dress your feet dry.

If you should, despite these precautions, develop a cold, remember two guiding principles, the best place to fight a cold is in bed; and do not drug yourself. When you are really in need of medicine, you need more than that you need medical attention. In bed, a cold falls to yield to rest in bed, hot baths, and a light fluid diet. It is good sense and better economy to call a doctor.

Home Remedies There is a simple angle about home remedies that ought to appeal to everyone. There are certain conditions arising in the daily life of the average man which, although of a medical nature, do not require the care and skill of the physician. A bruise, a cut, or a headache due to a dietary indiscretion are illustrative conditions. Such can in the main be treated by home remedies.

But what are home remedies? Chiefly the following—a standard antiseptic, heat, cold, water, rest, exercise, soap and friction or massage. By means of these, most of the simpler conditions can be adequately treated. If those remedies are unsatisfactory to the condition then the chances are that the condition is understood not only avoiding colds

GRASSHOPPERS DARKEN SKIES OVER MOROCCO

RABAT, Morocco, Jan. 8 (AP)—Skies have been darkened this winter by great flights of devastating grasshoppers. Billions and billions of them have been killed without greatly diminishing the swarms.

The flights frequently were such as to make a living brown carpet several miles square. With nets there frequently were captured at a single spot enough grasshoppers to fill as many as 10,000 sacks.

TO SUPERVISE DANCES

MEDFORD, Ore., Jan. 8 (AP)—The Medford city council last night voted that the police matron would supervise Elk dances in the future.

SALEM, Ore., Jan. 8 (AP)—Dr. M. E. Irvine of Lebanon was today appointed by Governor Norblad to succeed the late Dr. Harold Bean as a member of the state health board.
