HIGHLY COMMENDED—I thank my God through Jesus Christ for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world.—Romans 1:8.

If this armament conference doesn't quit before long, it will be cheaper to go on building battleships.

The milk survey, just completed by a federal inspector, brings good news to mothers who are constantly guarding their children against any chance of infection. Clean, safe milk is something for a city to be proud of—and the present standard is possible to a large extent because of the new milk ordinance passed some time ago, sponsored by leading dairymen. Milk, an essential food, is often an extremely dangerous food, and the health of a community cannot be guarded more effectively than by constant attention to the milk supply.

People rather enjoy complaining about tax burdens and various public expenditures but at least one municipal activity gets more praise than criticism. The band is keenly appreciated. Providing free entertainment of a high order, as it did last night, for those who enjoy good band music, it plays an important part in community life. Because members gladly give their time and talent without compensation, the cost to the taxpayers is small and the benefits are community-wide. La Grande is proud of her municipal band, and justly so.

Political cronies of Governor Norblad who are trying to have Frank Miller busted from the public service commission may find that Mr. Miller has a standing in the state equal to the governor's. A recent Patterson appointee, Mr. Miller became a commissioner after the commission had lost public respect. His state-wide reputation for fairness, for competency restored public confidence in the commission to a greater extent than any other one individual could have done. But Mr. Miller is one and a minority, and attacks on the commission have therefore continued. Some of them are well justified, some not. But attacking Frank Miller is not improving the standing of the governor. If Norblad wants to risk cleaning house and attempt to make votes at the same time, he will do well to start somewhere else and keep a competent man when he has one.

MOST VOTERS ARE SELFISH

In creating and holding for himself a place in the sun the average American is resourceful and efficient, as a rule. But in moving for some of the things that are vast, if largely ignored factors supporting the general establishment under which he thrives and prospers, he is often indifferent. Outstanding among these is the vote. Through it all good things are sustained—stable and efficient government, tolerable social conditions, property rights, personal security and "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness."

All good Americans who appreciate these important things vote to have them endure. A good American, in fact, is one who votes. A man may believe ever so sincerely in American institutions and be filled with loyalty and patriotism, but unless he votes he does nothing to perpetuate the blessings and privileges he enjoys.

Voting is, however, not enough. To sell your vote is worse than not voting at all. And the vote purifiers should not fool themselves that the hangers-on who draw a few dollars or drink of moonshine are the only sellers of votes. Are they poorer citizens than the voter who is guided at the polls not by the beacons of good government but by the hope of some special privilege such as political patronage? All those who preach honest elections may be sincere but many are inconsistent.

One of the evils of party politics is that it leads many to put party before good government. This imposes upon party leaders the responsibility of exercising the greatest care in making up their tickets. A party cannot expect loyalty from its members if its candidates are incompatible with good government.

McNary's filing for re-election followed the crash of the anti-McNary movement which developed against him prior to the passage by the senate of the $1.50 per thousand board foot tariff on soft woods. Lumbermen, opposed to McNary's methods to gain the tariff, banded together and began searching for a fit opponent to enter the field against the veteran solon. When the tariff bill passed the senate the movement fell to a standstill.

Piper and Joseph File

Another newcomer in the democratic gubernatorial race was Ed S. Piper, Portland, a lawyer, who had been mentioned but not seriously. On the same day that George W. Joseph, Portland attorney, actually filed his papers for the republican nomination for governor Piper filed with the secretary of state for the democratic nomination. Piper sought the democratic nomination as secretary of state a few years ago.

His platform started: "I favor prohibition as advocated by millions of good women."

Charles Hall Marshfield, on March 24, filed his official declaration as candidate for the republican nomination for governor, presenting as his platform "Industrialize Oregon."

Campaigns Continue

While these developments proceeded, Governor A. W. Norblad, Henry L. Corbett, another republican candidate; Edward F. Bailey, Salem, and A. C. Hough, two candidates for the democratic nomination, and Joseph continued their campaigning in various sections of the state.

Joseph selected Klamath Falls for his first appearance in the campaigning field and opened a verbal attack on the public service commission, the organization named in a petition which started circulating the first part of the week demanding the abolition of the commission. So far little progress has been made on the petition, observers said.

Governor Norblad Sunday will be included into the Klamath Falls fold. This news came simultaneously with the announcement of H. W. Poole, Klamath county agent that he refused a request from Governor Norblad to fill the vacancy on the state game commission. Poole said press of business was the reason for his declination.

Representative Franklin F. Korell of Portland has filed with the secretary of state his declaration as candidate for the republican nomination for an other term in congress.

Butter Prices Go Up Another Cent In Oregon

PORTLAND, Mar. 29 (AP) — Contrary to most predictions, butter and butterfat prices moved up another cent at the produce exchange today. Extras in butter are now 42c and butterfat delivered Portland is also 42c.

Though eggs are apparently coming in in large quantities prices remain unchanged. Storage is taking care of the surplus.

A leading produce company reports a keen demand for chickens at 35c a pound. It was reported to be of a most excellent quality. The same company has consignment of fresh strawberries selling at about 60c a box wholesale.
