Health Talks

BRONCHOPNEUMONIA Bronchopneumonia, which is very common in children, and to some extent also in the aged and feeble, involves, as the name indicates, the bronchioles or smallest divisions of the breathing trunks of the lungs, and the surrounding lung tissue.

Though the disease condition as we find it in the lung tissue is fundamentally one, its causes are many.

In children it is fairly common in connection with measles, whooping cough, diphtheria and scarlet fever.

Less frequently, bronchopneumonia may appear as a primary disease, that is, one that does not arise in connection with a foregoing infectious condition.

Sometimes, too, bronchopneumonia may follow the entrance into the lungs of fluids or solid particles which are germ laden.

The fundamental fact to bear in mind when considering bronchopneumonia is that it is a fatal disease, and that the younger the patient the more fatal the disease is liable to prove.

A lowered body resistance predisposes to the development of bronchopneumonia. The disease more common in winter and spring months. Cold, damp, changeable weather favors its development, and so do unhygienic conditions, poor food, insufficient clothing, overcrowded and badly ventilated sleeping quarters.

The prevention of the disease therefore depends upon maintaining good health and resistance; upon care during infectious illnesses; and upon the exercise of proper hygienic precautions.

TWO PRIMARY CONTESTS IN "SPOTLIGHT"

the other candidates, for Hall, also, promises a business administration.

Joseph Adds to Interest The entrance of George W. Joseph of Portland into the contest for governor has put interest in the contest at high tension. Joseph seized upon a psychological situation, and many who are not for him agree with his supporters that he did so to his advantage.

The board of three referees who had heard the Joseph disbarment trial had recommended his permanent disbarment from the practice of law in Oregon. Almost immediately Joseph declared himself a candidate for governor and made one of the planks in his platform "free speech and justice." The significance of this is that the disbarment action against him was based on his severe criticism of members of the supreme court.

J. E. Bennett of Portland seeks the governorship mainly on a plea in behalf of the farmer and the laboring man. In his campaign literature he declares that the state should see to it that every man has a job. John A. Jeffrey of Portland is not expected to cut seriously into the vote of any of the other candidates.

In the democratic field for governor the race is considered mainly between Edward F. Bailey of Junction City and George R. Wilbur of Hood River. Both are active members of the American Legion. Bailey twice represented Lane county in the state senate and was a member of the war veterans state aid commission until he resigned to run for governor. Wilbur is post state commander of the American Legion and has served in the legislature. A. C. Hough of Grants Pass is quite well known in western Oregon, since he has lived in Portland, in Marion county and in southern Oregon. He is said to be an important figure in law circles of his district.

Ed S. Piper, another democratic candidate, is little known outside of his own circle in Portland.

Two Judges in Race Judge James C. Campbell of Oregon City and George S. Shepherd of Portland seek the republican nomination for supreme court justice, the winner to contest for election in November with Chief Justice O. J. Coshaw who has no opposition for nomination. Justice Harry H. Holt, has no opposition.

State School Superintendent C. A. Howard and Labor Commissioner C. H. Gray are unopposed for republican nominations, and no democrats have entered.

Circuit Judge L. H. McMahan of Marion and Linn counties is the only circuit judge whose term expires this year who is opposed for re-nomination. His opponent is Guy O. Smith of Salem. Judges Robert G. Morrow and Clarence H. Gilbert of Portland, Fred W. Wilson of The Dalles and C. H. McCulloch, of Baker, have no contests either for May or November.

Benton, Clatsop, Polk and Wallowa counties have contests for the district attorneyship.

Multnomah county has 47 republican candidates for the 13 nominations, and five democrats filed. Douglas county has a peculiar situation, though there are two representatives to elect only one candidate appears for each of the republican and democratic nominations. Of the other 23 representative districts 12 are without contests for nomination, but in four of them both republicans and democrats are running. One of the districts without a contest is Clackamas and Multnomah joint district where Frank E. Andrews has filed.

Of the 23 senatorial districts nine are without contests for nomination, but the Lane and Linn district has a democratic candidate. To fill the short term in Multnomah county caused by the resignation of Barry L. Corbett there is only one candidate, James W. Crawford.
