GROCERY STORE

By Alice Johnson Peake

Next to playing house, there is nothing that the five or six-year-old enjoys more than playing store. It should be encouraged, as it is usually adapted to helping the child understand and organize his impressions of many aspects of the world in which he lives.

No educational is this type of play that it is often deliberately used in progressive schools.

Recently I saw a demonstration of this kind of play in a kindergarten. The 5-year-olds had set up a large wooden packing case for a grocery store. Crates, boxes and counters had been arranged of smaller boxes and the shelves were stocked with sample packages and empty receptacles of the things commonly used at home.

There was paper and string and a cash register made by one small boy, and another larger boy. The children had market baskets and took turns being storekeeper or shoppers. They had paper money and received to have a very good idea of the meaning of pounds and nickels and dimes.

Anyone who has a lack of imagination, or who is too busy to let children work out a similar play scheme for the most simple of the effort required in wheeling up a couple packing case from some neighborhood store and saving the children in which the family proceeded come.

The only danger in instigating such play at home lies in the fact that the adults of the family will be unable to resist the temptation to make the game even more educational than it already is.

If you can school yourself to leave the children to their own devices, you will find that playing grocery store is an absorbing and satisfactory occupation.
