agreeable to our views, it might defeat him," the letter said, "whereas, if he preserves silence he has good prospects of success. "I can give you my personal assurance that Mr. Martin is 100 per cent with us. I not only am personally familiar with his position but have assurance from many of my old friends who are equally close to him. "My suggestion is that you do not press him for any public statement, also if you could aid him in a financial way you can be assured that his response in congress will be agreeable if his vote will be of any value." Curran replied Martin would not be pressed.

O. S. C. Faculty Member Visits La Grande High

Dr. Dan V. Poling, extension lecturer from Oregon State college and uncle of Portland's Daniel A. Poling, spent yesterday morning and afternoon at the La Grande High school interviewing students and especially seniors, whom he addressed in the afternoon who expected to attend college.

He started the present tour in January and since then has visited practically half of the high schools in Oregon, and in these visits Dr. Poling says that "the remarkable thing that he has found is the fine administrative spirit manifested in the schools; all of them seem to have the situation well in hand." He expressed a wish to visit the high school and La Grande leadership shown by the students; he liked the response and appearance of the student body; it was alert and wholesome.

The ministry and education have been Dr. Poling's occupations. He was born in Pennsylvania, coming here as a youngster in 1889 after he had graduated from a school of theology and began his career as a minister. His first experience with the college ended in 1919 when he became minister for the First Presbyterian church of Albany. In 1929 he again became affiliated with the college. Yesterday was his first visit to the La Grande high school since 1919.

He was with the Pledge squadron of America organized in 1914 by the governor of Indiana which participated in every city of the United States, of 80,000 or larger with a program of education working toward the abolition of saloons. Dr. Poling was a speaker and also a musical director for the organization. He has also spoken on a large majority of the campuses of the former educational institutions during the last 25 years. He will be in Union today and will complete his visit to Eastern Oregon next Friday.

Dr. Poling was a speaker at the teacher's institute held in La Grande last fall.

CO-OPERATIVE CREAMERY IN VALLEY SURE

men have a sufficient butter fat resource to operate a plant of their own, the cows now assigned to Union county can be diverted back to Wallawa. Just when this will be done depends upon the rapidly development of dairying there. The method is very similar to the system involved in Union county where a group of dairymen, particularly at Union and Cove, became a part of the Payette Co-operative creamery about four years ago. At that time patronage was small but volume grew until a total of 523,000 pounds of butterfat produced in this county last year had been sent to Payette for manufacture. Last spring the cooperatives desired themselves capable of operating their own plant and now, after nearly a year of planning and promotion, the movement has been successfully launched. No more Union county cream will be sent to Idaho when the plant goes into operation in this county, Mr. Kestrad said. It is said that the Wallawa county dairymen of Portland and Spokane will be very largely diverted to the Union county plant, thus making this county the butterfat center of a large area and making possible the manufacture of at least 1,600,000 pounds of butter annually.

Oregon Units Operating—The first Oregon unit under this dairy development plan went into operation in Ontario about two weeks ago as a ice-cream institution. The second is located at Baker where, very recently, the cooperatives look over the Commercial Creamery company plant and now have 5000 cows to draw from. The management of these plants rests jointly with the Eastern Oregon Dairymen's association and the Eastern Co-operative Creamery company, whose membership is over 5000, 700 of whom are in the immediate territory, plan a big meeting in the near future to hear reports of their directors and to transact other business.

The exact location of the new plant has not yet been determined. Mr. Kestrad explains that this was a much-discussed topic for several months, and various means were instituted to have the location fixed, one plan being to have the cow owners name the location. This was abandoned through an agreement which set out that all parties interested would be guided by what decision might be reached by a disinterested man sent by the Challenge Cream & To this agreement reached last fall, H. E. Johnson, H. S. Comstock, both of Cove, and H. J. Nelson and Jas. A. Kafford, both Butter association of Long Adams.

Superstition Ends In Doctor's Death MEXICO CITY, Apr. 25 (AP)—A weird story of superstition and fear that ended in the stoning to death of Dr. Edgar Kuhlmann, Norwegian scientist, at Amozac, near Puebla, a week ago, was published by the newspaper El Universal today.
