Advertisement for GRAIN MARKETS SUFFER DECLINE, Improvement in Crops and Dull Export Demand Weakening Factors.

WASHINGTON, Apr. 28 (Special)—Grain markets suffered further declines during the week ending April 26th. Some improvement in the condition of winter wheat as a result of showers over large areas, and a dull export inquiry for North American grain, were the principal weakening factors in the wheat market, according to the weekly grain market review of the United States bureau of agricultural economics.

Winter wheat was benefited by rains over large areas, but drought conditions in parts of Oklahoma and Kansas were mostly unrelieved, and crops continued to deteriorate. Spring wheat seeding which is nearing completion was delayed by rains, but the additional moisture was beneficial for germination and growth of the crop.

European crop conditions continue favorable with moisture ample. Crop prospects in Spain and Italy are promising, but the outlook in France is expected to be below the unusually large crop of last season.

The crop is making good progress in the surplus producing regions of the Lower Danube with winter killing much less than last season. Prospects in England, Germany and Northwestern Europe are generally favorable although temperatures continue low and more rainfall is needed in parts of Germany. Itains are also needed in parts of Southern Russia, but conditions are reported favorable in other winter wheat regions of that country.

Spring wheat seeding is in progress under generally favorable conditions. Some damage to North African crops is reported from drought and locusts but otherwise conditions are good.
