

Ceremony Opens New 1700-Mile Soviet Railway

AFANABULAK, Kazakhstan Soviet Republic, Apr. 30 (AP)—The opening ceremonies of the new 1700-mile Soviet railway now in progress have had all the color of a gigantic rodeo of the American far west.

It was a momentous day in the Soviet Union and was proclaimed a holiday. Tens of thousands of mounted Kazania, Uzbeks, Khazars and other nomadic tribes of the Kazakhstan plains cheered William Shatov, former Chicago merchant and section hand on the Erie railroad, this week drove the spikes connecting the north and south sections of the first Soviet built railroad.

While the red army airplanes circled overhead in the scorching noonday sun, Comrade Isaev, president of the Kazakhstan republic, conferred the "Order of the Tolling Red Banner" upon Shatov, who was the leading Soviet executive in construction of the road.

Then admirers seized Shatov and bore him on their shoulders before cheering thousands, the band meanwhile playing the red inter-nationale.

3000-Mile Journey
The correspondents traveled 3000 miles as guests of the Soviet government to witness the dedication. The new locomotive pulling their special train was the gift of Britain. It bore the inscription "As our answer to the pope of Rome and the capitalist world who are crusading against us we open this Turkish-Siberian railroad on the first of May."

Kazakhstan, the latest autonomous republic within the Soviet Union, is transformed from virtually a barren waste into a region of great potential economic significance by the new railroad. The line connects the present central Asia road at Aris, Uzbekistan, with the great trans-Siberian railway at Novosibirsk, of the 1700 mile length, 1000 miles represents new construction. The first portion of 700 miles was built in czarist days. It will link the cotton fields of Turkistan with the great wheat producing areas of Siberia. It also opens the vast lumber resources of Siberia to Turkistan.

URGES STEPS TO HELP BUSINESS

U. S. Chamber of Commerce Hears Talks by Butterworth and Fahey

WASHINGTON, Apr. 29 (AP)—More than 2000 representatives of American business Tuesday heard tribute paid to efforts to straighten out the "uncontrollable and haphazard" swings of the business cycle and were urged to take further steps to deal with "profitless property."

Opening the first general session of the eighteenth annual meeting of the chamber of commerce of the United States, President William Butterworth and John H. Fahey, publisher of the Worcester (Mass.) Post, in turn praised business and outlined the problems before it.

In his keynote address, Butterworth said that during the past six months American business "has definitely broken new ground" in helping to smooth the peaks and valleys of the business cycle and in challenging "the rule-of-thumb economics which heretofore too generally prevailed."

Reviewing questions confronting business, Fahey said the "profitless property" to which he referred should be combated to the benefit of both capital and labor, he said it was "not the worker alone who is restless today concerning conditions which he feels are in some way wrong."

"For some years now," he said, "we have heard business men themselves raising pertinent questions concerning their inability in spite of the exercise of their best intelligence and abilities to secure for themselves and the investors in their enterprises a reasonable return from their efforts."

"The treasury department's analysis of corporation earnings in recent years shows that a large proportion of the business corporations of the country have been making little or nothing for some years. At the same time these figures disclose that a large proportion of all corporate profits of the country are absorbed by a comparatively few institutions."

Fahey also recommended steps to insure that "speculation be kept within reasonable bounds, and that it not be permitted to contribute in large degree toward bringing about business disaster."

Supreme Court Asked To Pass On Movie Suit

WASHINGTON, Apr. 30 (AP)—Having won in the federal district court in New York City a part of its anti-trust proceedings against ten of the principal film producing companies, the United States has asked the supreme court to pass on an anti-trust suit against the companies which it lost.

The government would have the highest court reverse former Judge Thacher, now solicitor general, in holding that the credit rules adopted by the First National Pictures, Inc., the Paramount Famous Lasky corporation, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing corporation, the Universal Film Exchange, the Fox Film corporation, and others did not constitute a violation of the Sherman Act.

Judge Thacher, in his decision, pointed out there are 25,000 motion picture theaters receiving motion picture films from the defendants, who distribute sixty per cent of the motion picture films in the country annually and that the films' board of trade throughout the country, affiliated with the producers, distribute approximately by 98 per cent of the motion picture films.

The producers and distributors operate with the exhibitors under these contracts call for an annual supply of films. They found these contracts were broken by some of the exhibitors through the actual or fictitious sale of motion picture theaters.

To protect themselves against these substantial losses arising through the repudiation of contracts by exhibitors, and the financial irresponsibility of some exhibitors, the producers and distributors said they adopted credit rules.

Chats With Parents

A BRIBE THAT FAILED

By Alice Jackson Peake

Phillip's mother is distressed because at the age of 8 he still sucks his thumb before going to sleep at night.

She has, according to her own statement, "tried everything." Recently she made a special effort. She told him that if he would stop sucking his thumb for a week she would give him the best pair of roller skates that could be bought.

But it was no use, and when that evening she confronted him with his failure even to make an effort to control this baby habit he smirked and said, "I don't care. I like to suck my thumb and if you don't give me the skates, it won't make any difference because I'll get Aunt Helen to give them to me."

It is almost always useless to try to cure a child of any firmly established bad habit through offering him a bribe.

No matter how much he desires the reward which is dangled before his imagination, he is sure to want more, momentarily at least, the immediate satisfaction of giving in to the old habit which has so long been a source of pleasure.

Thumb-sucking and kindred bad habits that have originated in infancy can almost never be cured by means so superficial as that of offering a reward. A habit thus entrenched is usually best simply ignored while every effort is made to help the child find other satisfactions which will gradually crowd the bad habit out of existence.

Play materials which stimulate physical activity, the companionship of other children, a cheerful and consistent home routine, these may be relied upon to help gradually where direct measures are doomed to failure.
