Chats With Parents

LATE HOURS
By Alice Judson Peade
Parents of high school children everywhere are wondering where the dissipation of late hours now customary among groups of adolescent boys and girls will lead them in terms of health and school grades. The problem is not solved simply by saying that your child, for one will not be perpetuated to stay out until all hours of the night. Such handling of the situation fails to take into account the fact that the child's standing with his own particular group of friends is of vital importance to him and that to deprive him of freedom equal to theirs is to work a great hardship upon him. As far as possible we can try to make him understand why we object to many shows and parties and late hours. If we present our side of the situation in a friendly sympathetic way we have a good chance of winning his cooperation and of effecting a fairly sensible compromise with the social situation in which the child finds himself. The average boy and girl can be made to limit his evening engagements to a reasonable two nights a week instead of the four or five that are customary in many a younger set. Perhaps the most effective way of handling a situation whose keynote is not the individual boy or girl, but an entire group, is to try to get as many parents as possible to cooperate as to the number and hours of parties and shows that are to be permitted. Parents getting together in this way can arrive at a solution which works hardships on no one child by making him different from the rest. The entire group will accept without objection the same restrictions which if imposed upon the individual child would cause only endless rebellion and unhappiness.

Davis announced today he would open his campaign for the republican senatorial nomination from New Jersey without returning to Mexico City or entering the United States senate at this time. Opium Replaces Wheat On Rich Chinese Farms

By Morris J. Harris (Associated Press Correspondent)
SHANGHAI (AP)—Extensive cultivation of the poppy plant in rich agricultural sections of China is listed by Chinese authorities as one of the principal reasons for the scarcity of foodstuffs in the country. For several years, the production of opium in this part of the world has been unusually profitable and despite the continuous anti-drug campaign conducted by the Opium Suppression League of China, poppy growing has increased. This is especially true in Anhwei province, Central China, one of the richest producing areas in the country. Here, farmers are turning to growing poppies on such a tremendous scale that last year, only one-tenth of the usual rice crop came out of the district. In most cases, too, the farmers use their best land for opium production, leaving the less fertile fields for rice and wheat. In many instances, the peasants have failed to grow enough grain for their own use; let alone having any for the market. Nor do the farmers longer fear the constant threats of opium suppression. Most of them are content that they will be permitted to continue growing the poppy without interference from the government for the simple reason that the government continues to tax their opium. The taxes, of course, are high but even so, the farmer has enough left over to make opium worth his while. Still another reason why the farmer prefers to grow poppies is the fact that little labor is required. The crop is planted in the autumn and harvested in the spring. A few years ago, the farmer would plant his opium and wheat in alternate rows. This was because he feared suppression. He could, if the necessity arose, tear up the poppies and leave the wheat to mature. This rarely happened. On the contrary, the farmers often pulled up the wheat before it had matured in order to give the poppy more room.

DON'T DROP SMOKES

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP)—Dropping lighted cigars or cigarettes from airplanes is prohibited by a new air-commerce regulation promulgated by the government as a result of a letter written by H. W. Dunlap, acting secretary of agriculture, to the department of commerce. Word of the new regulation was received here by C. J. Buck, federal district forester. Tests made in Idaho last year were said to have shown that lighted cigars and cigarettes dropped from any height, burned until they hit the ground. Many of them continued to burn after striking the earth, and many started fires.

The day after MOTHER'S DAY is wash day

Sunday, May 11, is dedicated to Mother. On that day we render homage to her devotion, her courage, her self-sacrifice. And no tribute can be too great.

But the next morning will find Mother—in many homes—going back to the same weary, dreary task of washing the family's clothes. She will not complain. But how she longs for relief from this heaviest of all household burdens... and how easily it can be lifted out of her life, forever!

Our modern method does the washing even better than Mother can do it—for we use hundreds of gallons of pure, soft water on each family bundle. And clothes washed our way last longer—in the long run cost no more—than those done at home. Phone for our routeman now. Make your Mother's Day tribute last throughout the year!
